The National Cheap Transportation Convention.

The National Cheap Transportation Convention, recently held in Chicago, was largely attended, and the proceedings occupied three full days of time. The resolutions adopted read as follows:

Resolved, That the great and peculiar need of this country is a system of transportation so cheap that every man who has a bushel of grain to sell can sell it at a price which will leave him the balance of the value of that grain after paying the cost of transportation, and which will enable the people of the United States to compete successfully with the world in the markets of the world.

Resolved, That the present system of railroad management is a failure to accomplish the object mentioned, and is responsible for the fact that while the farmers of the country are receiving but a small proportion of the value of their products, the railroads are piling up vast fortunes, and the people are groaning under the burden of taxation caused by the enormous debts of railroad companies.

Resolved, That the present system of railroad management is a failure to accomplish the object mentioned, and is responsible for the fact that while the farmers of the country are receiving but a small proportion of the value of their products, the railroads are piling up vast fortunes, and the people are groaning under the burden of taxation caused by the enormous debts of railroad companies.

Resolved, That the railroads are the public highways established by the people for the benefit of the people, and that they should be managed in the interest of the people, and not for the benefit of railroad kings and stock gamblers.

Resolved, That if the railroad companies of the country cannot or will not manage their roads in the interest of the people, they must be controlled by the people, and that the Legislatures of the several States are hereby requested to pass such laws as will enable the people to control the railroads within their respective States.

Resolved, That we favor the construction of such railroads as will enable the people to control the transportation of their products, and we favor the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and the Texas Pacific Railroad, and the Southern Pacific Railroad, and the Atlantic and Great Western Railroad, and the Chicago and Canada Southern Railroad, and the Chicago and Atlantic Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Huron Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Michigan Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Superior Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Erie Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Ontario Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Champlain Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Memphremagog Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Sebago Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Winnipiseogee Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Kennebec Railroad, and the Chicago and Lake Penobscot

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

"Old Probs" Mistake—The City of Charities—A Monster Fair.

A New Humane Society—Tammany at the Pool-tights.

The "O. A. U."

From our own Correspondent.
NEW YORK, Dec 1, 1875.
TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL:—

They say that "a green Christmas makes a fat churchyard," and if that is a fact, look out for corpulent cemeteries on this vicinity, for certainly the balmy air of the waiting season is spring rather than December. One can hardly suppose that New York is destined to acquire a place in the similarly overlarked list of the countries of the world and as the fleeting promises of the honey-dew is (with the supposition that Mr. Conkling has finally been transmuted to that fabled thing of his fancy, "noble nerves") hours are quickening, the only prominent theory left is that the Mohawk and Hudson is preparing to follow the example of the Erie, and "water" its stock in order to keep even with the times. Of course, all the Christmas gift "freshets" for the Legislature will be a very pleasant mistake for us, though, and I only fear that sending this letter, and being swallowed up in the river, he will send our aspiring mercury down to keep company with that of other neighbors.

But it is on all hands and knees remedy goal, and frosty as it is, a pot of warm tea come near the mark for those who indulge that late fire waiting in front of marbles and marriage licenses. Those have waited long for the prosperous county, and now, with their ghastly curving tracks and swan-head arrangements, they look for all the world like a lot of big turkey cocks strutting proudly in the face of heaven to provoke the storm that is to raise them from contact with ignoble planks and stones; that will bring out the bold, and the bolder; that will paint her cheek with the luminous rogue, make bright eyes brighter still, and make them earthly lovers, that now plod quietly along before receding wheels, look like the thunderbolt steeds of Jove.

That is one side of the winter picture. The other equally familiar, but much less pleasing, is the suffering of the city's poor—a class only too numerous in these times. For them, no such compensating pleasures are in prospect, but only an aggravation of sufferings which but for the spirit which has grown for New York the proud title, "City of Charities," would soon be beyond endurance. Fairs, benefit performances, and subscriptions are not neglected among the general festivities, and good work are being wrought that might cover a multitude of sins. The Hebrews, always generous to their own, at least, have just closed a grand fair which netted over $100,000 for charity's sake, at Harrison's Hippodrome, which is soon to be the scene of Moody and Sankey's labors among the spiritually destitute, and here the Gentiles been far behind.

Another movement has recently been set on foot, which, though not exactly in the same line, is sufficiently commendable to be worthy of mention here, and that is the effort of a certain ladies' society to lessen the misery of the cabs imposed upon the shop-girls in our large stores. While Mr. Hugh has come forth at once on these years respecting and avenging the slighted heiress to his four-legged protegee, a great lack of humanity, to say the least, has here gone hitherto unrebuked. The laws of the State have long forbidden the abuse or overtaxing of a horse, but, till now, strange to say, nobody has seemed to think it necessary to fix any limit to the endurance of a working woman.

This society referred to sum at reform in the unreasonable hours prescribed by employers, and still more in the barbarous rules now generally enforced, which forbid the saleswoman from sitting down to rest a moment while on duty, even when unemployed. It is hoped and believed that these efforts, supported as they are by the press an public opinion, will not only succeed here, but will cause a similar movement in other cities.

The long-looked for appearance on the stage of ex-major Hall has at last transpired, and as was expected, created quite a sensation. Seats for the opening night, brought extraordinary prices, and the house was full of nobodies—political, literary, and dramatic—who gave the illustrious debutant a very warm reception. The estimates of his abilities as an actor, which came out the next morning, presented a ludicrous variety, but the general success of his undertaking thus far is undeniable, and that is after all the great point.

Curiosity respected his part. "The Cenacle," had been wrought up to a high pitch by the popular bell; if that it would be a mirror of Tammany doings; but it such were the intentions of the author, they were too heavily veiled to be easily discernable.

All the other theatres are doing a large business, as is natural to the season, but there is nothing on the boards of special interest.

Miss Bateman's injunction on Mr. Augustin Daly, which forced him to withdraw his "New Leah" alone at the beginning of its run, results in nothing, and Miss Clara Morris' goodies is consequently under a temporary embargo. It will probably not be long, however, before we shall hear from her.

A new election from England, Mr. Bird, is attracting much attention among the devotees of the opera here, for the ease and nobility with which he changes his sex operatic.

A mandate has come down from Albany which disbands four regiments of the militia in whole or in part, to their infinite delights. These noble "Home Guards" stand ready for service, but as King Felden having made up his mind that their value as servants is really worth the numerous thousands which they annually cost the State, is irrevocable and insists that they must hereafter find some other amusement than playing soldier.

The New York Herald, which won't surely die with its 67th sensation, is now devoting its double-leaded columns to a grand expose of a new and terrible secret society which it claims to have discovered. This dreadful band of secret assassins is named the Order of Central American, and is said to have for its object the total extinction of Roman Catholics from office, and the advocacy of a third term. But the Herald is rather given to drawing the long bow, and till further developments, it is hardly worth while to allow our looking serenity to be shaken by its startling disclosures. REDIVIVUS.

The lordly landlords of England look on their tenants as mere serfs and mots Mr. Lake, Mayor of Gravesend, was asked by the Earl of Darnley to induce his son to resign a military position because the Earl had quarreled with the regiment and resigned his position. The Mayor refused, saying he could not see what the Earl's action had to do with his own son. Thereupon the Earl wrote him a letter, claiming that "feudal traditions ought to establish sympathy of sentiment and identity of interest between tenants and landlords." Mayor Lake was stubborn, and the Earl served a notice of ejectment on him. The newspapers came down hot and heavy on the aristocrat, and he withdrew his notice and asked Mr. Lake to remain his tenant. The latter gentleman refused, because "self-respect compelled him to decline any such relations with the Earl." The impudent peer has thus made a fool of himself and are humble pie to no purpose. This shows a weakening of the cold flunkey spirit in England, and affords much fun for the newspapers.

The Centennial Commissioner, in a circular just issued, makes the following capital suggestion, which the SENTINEL heartily approves, and commends to the consideration of our citizens:

"It seems proper that the local celebrations of the Fourth of July, 1876, which will be held throughout the land, should be made to contribute to a permanent historical memorial of the Centennial celebration. In each county provision should be made for the delivery of an address tracing the history of that particular community for the past century, or from the time of its settlement, and including a sketch of its growth, its resources, industries, prospects, etc. These addresses should be published in a uniform size,—that of the Congressional documents, for instance,—in order that they may be bound together by States. To competent persons the preparation of such addresses would not be an unduly burdensome task, but in the aggregate they would constitute an invaluable historical repository, such as no nation has ever had the opportunity to collect.

Designations of the historians ought to be made without delay, in order that they may have time to accomplish their work. It is to be hoped that the press will give general circulation to the project, and that each journal will see to its consummation in its own locality."

Very Poor Backing.

We see little or no attempt in the Democratic papers to back up the action of their party in Congress, in displacing Union soldiers, who were wounded during the war, from service as employes in and about the House of Representatives, and filling their places with Confederates. That is not right. The best show the Democratic journals have made in defense of such action is to grow out that President Grant has appointed to office in the South some persons who served in the Confederate armies, and that is very poor backing. They ought to do better than that. Why do they not come squarely up to the mark and make a bold defense of it? Why do they sit passively and see their party scored and criticised, as if its acts admitted of no justification?

When Mr. Fort introduced that resolution declaring that wounded Union soldiers should be preferred for subordinate officers of the House, he threw a fire brand amongst the Democracy for which the journals of that party should have preached to castigate him at once. Mr. Cox did not attack it as forcibly as he might, but sought a way to quench it by strategy, and he succeeded. He proposed a substitute, which was adopted by a party vote, do away in substance that since the war is over all citizens have equal claims to office and patronage—that is to say, the rebel who fought to destroy the Union has just as good claims as the loyal man who fought to save the Union. But the substitute was not passed to a final vote, and his backing by his friends was very poor. Mr. Hiliman showed the white feather. He saw at once how an immediate vote upon the passage of the resolution would look. So instead of carrying that Democratic resolution straight through, it was referred to a committee, and now, during the holidays, when the organs of the party ought to be outspoken in its favor, and stiffening up the backbones of the Democratic Representatives, and they are looping in the depth of their hearts that the committee will never report upon it. They dread the debate and the vote which would then be inevitable. Think is cowardly backing.

Why, just look here. It is an easy, straightforward, consistent Democratic job to defend that whole business. Mr. Fort's resolution was an attempt to deprive the Democracy of the legitimate fruit of victory. The Democratic party was voted into the control of the House of Representatives for the very purpose of putting the Gray above the Blue, to exalt the Confederate cause and lower the Union cause. Confederate brigadiers and Colonels were chosen and the sense put in their hands that they might give the preference to soldiers on their side for all the minor offices about the House. The resolution as it now stands amended by the substitute of Mr. Cox, lifts the fight Democratic the ground, and there is no occasion for the orators or editors of that party to be tender, footed or nicely mouthed about it. It is their plain duty to give it hearty backing. They are at liberty to use this article without credit, for that purpose. The resolution affirms that Confederate and Union soldiers should now be recognized as of equal merit. It declares nothing new. That is just what has all along been contended for by the Democrats in the election campaigns through which those Democratic Representatives, Confederate Brigadiers and Colonels, and all, were chosen. And to declare that Confederate and Union soldiers are of equal merit is to declare that the Confederates have been unjustly dealt by and deprived of their fair share of patronage hitherto. A logical deduction now is that this neglect and injustice should be atoned for by sending the Union soldiers into back seats, or out to grind hand organs, while the Confederates monopolize the front seats their party having now gained the power. Can anything be clearer? It not the vindication easy and complete? It is the duty of the Democratic journals to come up manfully and defend that policy of their party on its merits. The Confederates must now have all the offices, and have them for a long time, in order to get even handed justice for having so long been left out in the cold.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

The Grand Traverse Herald is emphatically the leading Republican journal published in this Congressional district. Here is its comment upon his recent vote against the third-term resolution, and which we heartily endorse:

"We are greatly surprised, as are his constituents without exception, so far as we know, at the vote of our own representative, Mr. Hubbell. We do not know that he favors a third term; but we do know that he lost a golden opportunity to the people of the country that his constituents are unitedly and earnestly opposed to the election of any man a third term to the presidential office. Here was an opportunity—an opportunity, too, blunderingly offered by our opponents—to put a question on that third term question, and it ought to have been done by a unanimous Republican vote. We regret, more than we can find language to express, that our own member failed at such a time. He could scarcely have given a vote upon any question that would have been received with such widespread and hearty disfavor. To use a mild term—as this

"If every Republican member had voted for the resolution, it would have been regarded, everywhere, as effectually stamping out a political heresy which has done us immense harm the past two years, and still has life enough to give us trouble in the future. Where were Mr. Hubbell's political rival views may be, he has, in this instance, signally failed to express the sentiments of his constituents."

MAGNETIC OINTMENT

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world the result of his labors, a combination of vegetable extracts the power of which in curing the sick... is unrivaled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of those powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success of this Ointment is the application of a great discovery of the age, and calls for a full and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to receive a natural and healthy action by the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease, when common remedies fail to produce any effect.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its presence and healing influence. Hence it cures as readily with internal as external Disease.

Numerous instances are on record where this Ointment has been used internally as well as over the place that the most powerful internal remedies failed, to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism in its worst form, this most powerful remedy is prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Chronic Sore Throat, Sore Mouth, Salt Rheum, Scrofulous, Inflamed Sore, Fever Sores, Boils, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

An Almanac Three Thousand Years Old.

Turner is in the British Museum an almanac, which seems but little at being 3,000 years old. An account of it is given by a writer in the Dublin University Magazine of 1856. It was hieratic used by some old Egyptian as a diviner, and was inscribed on both sides of a papyrus roll, which when wrapped in cerements and mummified. Some antiquarians endeavor thus to preserve it, expect it to decay and displayed it to the public. It was written on papyrus, and originally covered thirty-eight columns. Twenty-five columns are preserved in tolerable legibility. The days are written in red ink, and the figure symbolizing the name is followed by those characters prophetic of the nature of the morning, the day and the evening. Thus, under "Thoth" January—we read what can be conveniently expressed: Thoth 25, 6, G M. The letters being substitutions of "good, good and middling," and beginning the one morning and therefore would be read as a conjunction of one kind and another, so that a lucky and best keep steadily to the country. After these general observations follow particular instructions. Some of these seem to us bizarre enough, as to the proper time to be performed an action, and it is not to be supposed that we have a basis and before he sets out on his march every part of his body where the skin is fitted to touch in the hot sun—his forehead, his nose, etc.—must be anointed with grease. When at last, he must be passed in the shade and renewed at intervals. A couple of cured fish and some beef and flavored to stand stress to combine him, as a docile elephant never attempts to break away from restraint.

His daily ration, while on the march, consist of bread, twenty to twenty-five pounds or wheat-flour, kneaded into cakes with water, and a pound of ghee, or clarified butter, and a half-pound of salt. These cakes are baked in pound loaves, and one-half is given at each of two separate meals. These rations ought not to be altered in quantity; hence it is important that the traveler should look to the matter himself, as the subordinates are scrupulous to rob the elephant by way of providing for his own family. But the regular meals of bread do not by any means furnish sufficient sustenance for the huge beast. He must be regularly taken to the jungle, where he selects and breaks off for himself hundreds of particular trees—species of the fig are his especial favorites—and, loading them on his back, returns to camp. He there strips off the leaves, which he eats, and by a single dexterous stroke with the delicate finger terminating his trunk, removes the bark from each twig, however slight, and then, discarding the wood as he before has done and fined.

The Bashful Young Man.

He is a common enough but he is universally laughed at.

He is painfully conscious of existence wherever he goes, and it usually doubles his misery to know that he could come and go now and then long enough to recover his composure.

His feet and hands are always wonderfully in the way, and a large portion of his time is passed in the melancholy task of counting his two thumbs, as if he were not altogether certain whether they were mates or not. He contemplates the loss of his locks for hours together, with a face as grave and large as if these same locks were the "vague, mysterious future" of which we hear so much, and he was seeking to penetrate its secrets.

He cannot walk across the room with out turning up the corners of all the rugs in his pathway, and if he does modify over the ottomans and sweep the ornaments off the centre table with his coat-tails he may turn to contemplate liability to a large room.

Every time he passes a looking-glass he will, of course, bruise his ankle bones against the rockers, and he will wish—mentally, it need hardly be the inventor of rocking-chairs in a warm latitude.

When he is interested to a lady he fancies he is a ventriloquist, and hears with a sick and sommers, and toss in his pockets for and pulls his sidelocks, if he has any, and flirts with his watch chain, and plants his foot on the lady's dress, and calls her Miss, if she is a Miss, and even worse—and makes himself miserable generally.

But it is notable that he exhibits most powerfully his peculiarity. He eats pudding since on ice potatoes and gravy on the apple dumplings, and he tries to cut the butter, and the bell bounces out of the sugary plate into the steak plate, and pastries the gravy all over the table cloth. He drops his knife, and strikes his boot against his tumbler, and spills his tea, or throws his hoggie with the hot coffee, and gets himself into a pickle generally.

When he calls on an acquaintance he never knows what to say. He talks about the weather until the subject will admit no more quibbling, and then he will fall into a dark silence, and roll his disquieting eyes about from one corner of the room to the other to the vast hope that they may discover something there when it remains for us to smile.

He never knows when to go away, and when he has made up his mind to go, he is very likely to ground his stand to make a move.

His books are a—inside! men's rooms always accumulate and more will be over his coats hats even him on the floor, and he doesn't remember where he left his hat—and he could per-plexities hunt-ers no large as life, gorgeous in their green, and scarlet and purple plumage, where he can't find it. He ferrets and rummages and ransacks and turns everything upside down, and finally sends for the landlord,

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are entirely vegetable preparation of the Sweet Flowers and Roots of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS? Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and restore the patient to health. They are the great blood purifier and a life giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable curative powers of Vinegar Bitters over Rheumatism, and Chronic Diseases of the Stomach, Liver, Blood, and Kidneys. In such diseases they have been most successful. Their tonic properties are also remarkable. The properties of these Bitters are Purgative, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative and Diuretic, and thus they act on all parts of the system at once. They are a perfect Purifier and Restorative. No person can take these Bitters according to the directions and remain long unwell, as they will build up the constitution with new blood, and the vital forces will be sustained by pure nourishment. Bilious, Remittent, Intermittent, Typhoid Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder are all cured by the use of these Bitters. No Bilious attack can occur where these Bitters are used as a preventive. Keep the system regular by occasional doses of the Bitters, and all will be well.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 26th says the Mexican Secretary of Foreign Affairs had stated, in reply to a request of Minister Foster for permission for certain United States troops to follow raiders across the border, that the Mexican Government was without authority to grant such request except by consent of Congress. Mr. Foster replied that the acknowledgment by the Mexican Government of its inability to restrain its own citizens would be the strongest possible argument to all subjects of the assassination of Indians in Mexico. Mr. Foster said further that the citizens of Texas must be protected, and if Mexico did not prevent raiders from invading the border the United States would.

HENRY LAWYERS of Franklin, La., recently married to Judge Monet, of the 30th Ward Parish Court, a decision requiring him to resign because of his alleged matrimonial incompetency and the interested motives which generally influenced his decisions. The Judge replied that no man tried to perform his duty faithfully and impartially, and that inasmuch as the signers of the paper did not vote for him, he should continue to administer the functions of the office until all constituents meaning the cold and prosperous called upon him to resign. The members of the bar threaten not to appear before the next Legislature to secure his impeachment.

AT Cincinnati, the other night, Mrs. Lawrence dropped dead in a hall. The fire caught in the carpet and her clothes, and in an instant she was wrapped in flames and horribly and probably fatally burned. Her husband and daughter made efforts to save her and were themselves badly burned.

Important Land Decisions.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.

COMMR. Land Office for December reports decisions of the Secretary of the Interior, establishing the following principles:

Homesteads—The possession of an executor or administrator is, under the Homestead Law, the possession of the heirs or devisee, subject to the right of administration vested in the officer, and the time allowed by the court for the settlement of the estate must be counted in the year or decision in making final proof. The provisions of Section 2291 of the Revised Statutes are substantially complied with by continual cultivation for the period of five years by the heirs or devisee, personal residence not being required in their case. At a hearing to determine the abandonment in the case of the deceased homestead claimant, a certified copy of the will and other matters connected therewith may be introduced.

Pre-emption—A mortgage unsatisfied at the date of proof and entry defeats a pre-emption claim, also decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the effect that soldiers now in the regular army may, under Section 2,261 of the Revised Statutes, perform the preliminary acts relating to homestead entries therein mentioned.

Timber Culture—The planting of seeds or cuttings is not a compliance with the Timber Culture act, but the General Land Office does not inquire how the required trees are produced. If seeds or cuttings produce healthy growing trees the law is complied with. A timber culture settler may relinquish a portion of the land embraced in his entry and hold the remainder.

Salt Springs—The existence of a salt spring on a tract of land withdraws it from the operation of the Homestead and Pre-emption laws, vide Sections 2,238 and 2,289, Revised Statutes. A hearing for the purpose of proving the mineral cultural character of such lands is not allowed.

Mineral Lands and Railroad Grants—The question, "Can lands containing valuable deposits of mica, inuring, if agricultural, to the Union Pacific Railroad, be patented under the Mining Law?" was answered: First—Lands containing valuable deposits of mica may be patented under the Mining law of May 10, 1872. Second—All minerals, except coal and iron, are excepted from the grants to railroads.

LAST night Mr. Middleth, happy and beaming, went home with both wings full of Christmas bundles and his hands were so full he couldn't open the front door, but stood kicking it with his knees. Presently he heard his wife skipping along the hall to meet him, and Mr. Middleth thought he would surprise her with a little touch of lover-like gallantry. The moment the door was opened he overwhelmed her with an avalanche of bundles, threw his arms around her, and, despite her shrieks and struggles, kissed his neighbor's wife, who had just run in on a little informal call and was on her way out when Mr. Middleth met her. And Mrs. Middleth stood about halfaway down the hall, petrified with amazement, both hands lifted and her eyes and mouth equally wide open. Mr. Middleth feels grateful indeed that he does not have to work to-day, because he thinks it will require just fourteen hours' straight talking to convince Mrs. M. that he didn't know all the time who it was.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

It is believed that Yosemite means to make it hot again for the surrounding country, and amidst your woes he thinks fall that you don't own any garden land at the foot of the growling mountain.—Detroit Free Press

THE following postal changes were made in Michigan, exclusive of Presidential appointments, during the week ending Dec. 18, 1875: Postmasters appointed—Fairview, Mason County, Leonard Thurston, Mineral Springs, Newaygo County, John C. Reddon, Riverview, Antrim County, Henry W. Stewart.

THE sergeant-at-arms of the Legislature elected Sheriff case has been decided in favor of H. W. Austin, the Republican contestant, the jury finding that he received a majority of twenty-four votes, excepting the towns of Reuben and St. Charles. The vote of these towns by the jury threw out on account of the manifest frauds committed

JOSEPH T. TANNER, United States Current Count Commissioner for the Grand Rapids District, has been superseded and succeeded by Col. C. H. Hinsdell. It is said he is to be appointed Assessor for one of the revenue districts now that the consent of a full bird is lawful right to stipulate that parties might not be admitted to a public entertainment.

FOUR convicts broke out of the Jackson Prison on the 24th. Their names as reported Stanley Shackles are already in jail, Jack in October last for three years for burglary, Edward Reed, same place, time two, personal residence not being required in their case. At a hearing to determine the abandonment in the case of the deceased homestead claimant, a certified copy of the will and other matters connected therewith may be introduced.

THE State Board of Education, in their annual report, express the opinion that the State is in an excellent condition and the attendance larger than ever. The number of students received into the normal department during the past year was 536, and whom 101 were State appointees and entitled to free tuition. The number graduated during the past year was 156, and the right of whom entered on the work of teaching soon after graduating.

PETER CAMPBELL, the murderer of Wilcoxson, was recently arraigned in Buffalo and taken to Detroit, where the murder was committed. He talks freely of the affair, and says he was crazy drunk and was recovering from the effects of a prolonged spree. He claims not to recollect any of the details nor cause of his quarrel with Wilcoxson, and asserts that he only intended to hit him a light blow and never expected to injure him. He was arraigned for murder and pleaded not guilty.

THE charge of forgery preferred against Henry D. Wisner, of Detroit, in connection with certain promissory notes purporting to have been signed by Stout and Hudson, has been dismissed, the court holding that Stout and Hudson had both been aware of the existence of such paper in the money market, and of its repeated renewals, without notifying the public or publishing a denial in the proper authorities, and that the claim of defendant that he had the authority of these men to sign their names was a valid one. There is about $30,000 worth of this paper afloat.

THE seventh annual report of the State Sail Inspector, lately transmitted to the Legislature, states that in the Eleventh Inspection District there are operating three companies, thirty four kettle-blocks, forty-seven steamers, twenty-two pan-blocks and 437 solar cavers, having an annual manufacturing capacity of 1,800,000 barrels. The total amount of salt inspected in the State was as follows: Fine salt, 1,057,886 barrels, packers', 10,233; solar, 24,336; second quality, 19,410; total, 1,091,865, being an increase of 34,986 barrels over last year's product. The revenue the State Salt Inspector for the year ending on Nov. 30, 1875, is as follows:

Duties on 1,091,865 barrels at three mills per barrel	$2,456 98
Duties on 4,967,130 barrels at two mills per barrel	9,134 26
Total	$11,591 24
EXPENDITURES.
Salary of State Salt Inspector	$2,187 44
Office and traveling expenses, printing, etc	612 02
Salaries of Deputy Inspectors	8,068 78
Total	$11,498 99
Balance	92 25

For the purpose of showing the increase over the amount of salt produced during the first year of the inspection, 1869, the following comparative statement is given: 1869, 560,818 barrels; 1870, 621,952 barrels; 1871, 728,175 barrels; 1872, 724,481 barrels; 1873, 823,946 barrels; 1874, 1,026,879 barrels.

The Mississippi Fraud.

MESSRS. BANARD, THURMAN, GORMAN and others of the Senate are again on the tiptoe of apprehension and dismay. Again they see an attempt to tear down the fabric of freedom and consolidated power in the Executive. So they warn their countrymen, as they have warned them again and again during the last twelve years, that liberty is to be stifled and justice outraged. All this exhibition of terror grows out of a proposition to investigate the manner of the late election in Mississippi, and as to whether that election was fraudulent or otherwise. There would hardly appear to be room for such feeling and such gloomy predictions in this fact, but these gentlemen are easily disturbed whenever it is proposed to look into Democratic misdeeds, and they never fail to see in a proposition of this character another attempt to destroy our republican institutions. But there is reason to believe that they are deceived. We remember they told us the same thing when preparations were made to force the rebel States back into the Union. Mr. Bayard's dismal forebodings specially darkened the moment such an attempt should be made to the negro would be taken into legislation. He was even in Senator Ingalls Pinchback case, with the constitutional amendments, so with the Reconstruction laws; indeed, we have seen the country denounced by Democratic orators as in the opinions of these patriots that the prophets is groaning extremely monotonous. There is no ground for alarm in the going right. It is right to restore fraud upon the ballot-box; and if it has been practiced in Mississippi the country is in far more danger from ignoring and winking at than from investigating and punishing it. Mr. Morton, in submitting his resolution providing for such investigation, predicted some curious facts. He said

In 1869, at the election on the adoption of the Constitution, the total vote was 74,439; in 1872, at the Presidential election, 120,466; in 1875, the last Congressional election, 115,397, or at the recent election, 108,000. This increase of more than 34,000 over the highest vote ever cast before. The Republican majority in the State in 1869 was 29,809; in 1870, 30,885; in 1873, 29,926, and at the recent election the Democratic majority was 8,000. The total Democratic vote in 1869 was 36,095; in 1873 it was 47,388. In 1875 it was 44,-275. So that in 1869 it was 36,000; in 1875 it was 44,000.

He read from Democratic newspapers showing the intimidation that existed in Mississippi, and showed some of the intimidation that had taken place, as the vote of certain precincts. In Yazoo, for instance, the Republican vote in 1872 was 2,243. Democratic vote, 1,000. At the last election the Democratic vote was 4,041, the Republican vote 71. Other precincts showed similar results. He referred to the fact that the Democratic party had by constitutional or organized means disfranchised all who were known to be Republicans, and claimed that it was competent for the Senate to investigate the matter of the late election in Mississippi, and to ascertain whether that election was fraudulent or otherwise. There would hardly appear to be room for such feeling and such gloomy predictions in this fact, but these gentlemen are easily disturbed whenever it is proposed to look into Democratic misdeeds, and they never fail to see in a proposition of this character another attempt to destroy our republican institutions. Details of the Dynamite Explosion at Bremerhaven.

The following particulars respecting the explosion at Bremerhaven are from the Bonn Zeitung:

It appears that just before the Mosel was about to sail a coal combining four cases and a parcel was being unloaded for shipment. Suddenly a terrible explosion occurred. The effect was horrible. The crew was then thronged with people—passengers going on the steamer, guests and friends and passengers who had remained on the vessel after it had left the docks. An enormous mass was stood under the gangway of the Mosel, and hearing the noise of explosion a number of black lumps flying about in the air, whether they were human or coal remained doubtful. Appalled, the crowd stood for a time as if stunned. Then all who were in a condition to do so rushed to the assistance of the wounded. The scene of devastation on board the Mosel was terrible. The entire after part, starboard and port were shattered to pieces. The bulwarks, the railing and stanck were with pieces of wood and human debris. In the hold the beams of the ship were bent asunder, and the whole of the ship's timbers, even to the lowest hold, were twisted some inches through the open hatchways. The engine-room and the funnel were also damaged, and the mainmast was shattered. Above all the mangled remains of the unfortunate stoker, which consisted of the trunk of the body, the head and the arms, were scattered in all directions. The cabins, saloon and steerage were completely destroyed. The crew were with splinters of wood and human flesh. Pieces of flesh and bones were found on the deck and even in the rigging. The crew were all wounded, and the passengers also. Some were thrown down by the force of the explosion, and others were struck by splinters of wood. The cabin of the captain was also completely destroyed. The captain himself was thrown down by the force of the explosion, and was wounded in the head. The chief officer was also wounded. The second officer

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked—"What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers as health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Restorator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Frauds on the State Lands.

The State of Michigan has been awfully fortunate in the purity, economy and business sagacity with which its public affairs have been administered. It has been singularly exempt from "ring" powerful and corrupting lobby, extravagant legislature, or defaulting State officers. In the condition of its finances it compares favorably with any State in the Union. But it has its money losses and wastes, like other communities, and probably the greatest single cause of recent years has been the result of the "part paid" system of selling lands, and the abuses and frauds connected with that system by purchasers.

In speaking of "frauds on the State lands," we desire it understood at the outset that the phrase implies no charge of complicity or "geography" or failure in duty on the part of the present State officials. On the other hand, the most aggressive of the State lands, under the vigorous administration of Commissioner Clapp, and under the more stringent regulations adopted by the legislatures of 1873 and 1875, upon the recommendations of Mr. Clapp and the governor dignified, as earnest and thorough as it could be made consistent with the rights of purchasers and the security of the State. Another consideration of importance is that many of the frauds committed upon the State were perpetrated before the present Commissioner of State Lands had any connection with the office.

I've noticed quite a number in our town read the first few issues of The Weekly Tribune, which have been sent to them free, and subscribe for the paper at the end of the month. It is a good paper, and I am glad to see it is meeting with success. Now is the time to subscribe for a newspaper. Many people wait until they have a dollar to spare before they subscribe, and then they forget it. Now I suppose you will be glad to see me subscribe for The Tribune. Here is a dollar. Ancient Athletic Games.

PARIS, made many hundred years ago, are still in existence, showing the wrestlers of ancient Greece in various attitudes, offensive and defensive. Copies of these prints are in this city. One of them represents two athletes clasping each other's wrists, preparatory to securing a firmer hold. The two men are represented in the same attitude as that assumed by Christol and Miller on the occasion of their first exhibition in this city. Classical history contains many references to the names and deeds of some of the most famous of these wrestlers, and painters and poets were employed in celebrating their prowess. But it is to Pindar that the world is indebted for the best descriptions of the four great festivals of the Greeks. In his odes Pindar not only celebrated the place where the victory was won, but interpolated beautiful episodes describing the greatness of the heroes, the dignity of their ancestors and the glory of the several Republics where they flourished. Of all the Grecian festivals, the Olympian games were the most prominent, with the Romans the same credit is given as to the Grecian games, established by Romulus at the rape of the Sabines. The first were originally observed B. C. 1432 but were soon after neglected, and were not renewed until the year B. C. 884. This revival forms a celebrated epoch in Grecian history, and is the beginning of the Olympiads. Thus the Olympian games served as the epoch to the people of Delphi, the Nemean games to the Argives and Arcadians, and the Isthmian games to the Corinthians, and to the inhabitants of the Peloponnesian Isthmus. The two last were, however, but offshoots, so to speak, of the parent stem. For fifty Olympiads only one person superintended the games, after that two were appointed. In the 103d Olympiad the number was increased to twelve, but was subsequently reduced to ten. These superintendents were obliged solemnly to swear that they would act impartially, and not take any bribes from the athletes. In the games were exhibited wrestling, boxing, running, leaping and the throwing of the wheel. To these also there were horse and chariot races, and also contests in poetry, eloquence, painting and sculpture. For a long time women were not permitted to appear at the games, but in later years this law was repealed, and the crown of victory was often awarded by one of the gentler sex. The preparations for the athletic exercises were great. No person was permitted to enter the lists if he had not regularly exercised himself ten months before in the public gymnasium. No unfair dealings were allowed and in wrestling, wherever attempted to bribe his adversary by money or gifts he was subjected to a severe fine. The only reward which the victor obtained was a crown of olive or pine. This seems a trifling reward, almost contemptible, but it was highly prized by ancient Greece, emblematic of dignity and virtue, and was more highly prized than would have been great treasures. These games, which were observed every fifth year, were introduced into Italy in the year B. C. 220, by the first Roman ambassadors sent to Athens and Corinth. The Pythian games were originally celebrated once in every nine years, but afterward in the second year of every Olympiad. It is said that the gals themselves were among the first combatants, but according to most authors the first prizes offered were won by Tolamon, grandbearer to Hercules, in wrestling; Polyus, in boxing, Castor, his twin-brother, in horse-racing and Calais, another one of the argonauts, in running. In the Nemean games the contests, both athletic and equestrian, were of a similar kind. They were celebrated in the first and third year of every Olympiad, and served as an era to the archives and the inhabitants of the surrounding country. It is noteworthy that it was near where these games were celebrated that Hercules killed the Nemean lion. The Cumpin Martius—so called because dedicated to Mars—was the place where the Romans enjoyed themselves in athletic sports. This was a large plain at Rome, without the walls of the city, where the young men performed their exercises, and learned to wrestle, to box, to throw the exstra, hurl the javelin, ride a horse, drive a chariot, etc. It was adorned with statues, columns, arches and porticos, and on account of its pleasant situation was frequented by large numbers of the citizens. The games in the circus were mostly equestrian, such as leaping, wrestling, throwing the quoit and javelin, races on foot as well as in chariots and boxing. This latter exhibition continued five days, beginning on the 13th of September. One of the greatest wrestling contests ever reported was the one between Ulysses and Ajax, the poet Homer describes the event in his Iliad. The struggle continued for sometime, and was witnessed by many thousands of spectators, including the army which had besieged Troy. Finally Achilles, who was acting as referee, bade them cease their efforts, and both were crowned as victors. Amlrogeus, a son of Minos and Pasiphae, was famous for his skill in wrestling. He overcame every antagonist at Athens, and became such a favorite with the people that the King grew jealous and caused him to be put to death. The wrestler's father declared war against the King to revenge the death of his son, and peace was at last established only on condition that seven boys and seven girls should be sent yearly from Athens to Crete to be devoured by the Minotaur. It was Theseus who delivered his country from this shameful tribute by killing the monster. Theseus, who was himself skilled in all the athletic games, subsequently established rules for the government of wrestlers, and which are comparatively the same as those now in use. Another great wrestler was Eglos, who was born dumb. Of him it is said that, seeing some foul wrestling in a contest, he broke the string which held his tongue through the desire of rebuking the offender, and ever after spoke with ease. The name of Antaeus is perhaps more famous. He was the son of Neptune and Terra, and was of immense size. Hercules wrestled with him, but he received new strength each time he touched his mother earth. The god then lifted him in the air and squeezed him to death in his arms. Diagoras, an athlete of Rhodes 460 years before the commencement of the Christian era, saw his three sons crowned on the same day at Olympia, and died through excess of joy. Pindar celebrated the father's merits in a beautiful ode, still extant, which was written in letters of gold in a temple of Minerva. Then there was Cerycon, a King of Elensis, and said by some writers to be a son of Neptune, and brothers of Vulcan. He obliged all strangers to wrestle with him, and as he was skilled in all the science of the sport they were invariably conquered and put to death. He challenged Theseus, who has already been mentioned, by whom he was fairly thrown and was put to death. Sometimes the same person gained prizes at all these festivals. Aristides, an Athenian, was thus successful. The list might be continued, but enough has been given to show how important these games were considered by the Greeks and Romans.

Reports of the enthusiasm which these Greco-Roman games are creating in this country have reached France, where the most celebrated wrestlers of modern times reside. It is stated on what seems to be good authority that several of the greatest of French wrestlers are arranging to visit the United States and exhibit their skill before the American public.—*N. Y. Quick Ears.

IT is sometimes surprising to see how animals learn to pick out the sound in which they take an interest from the thousand noises of the city. In Paris a man who goes about with cinnamon for the cats rings a bell as he approaches the house of a customer. Long before the members of the household detect the sound pussy will spring to the door and with eager looks await the arrival of her benefactor; for as the law now less of trade she can only look on the "cut-mest man" as a true philanthropist. She can always pick out his voice and tune amidst the turmoil of the busy street.

A gentleman was in a W.-Strasse seagart was down on the sharp on day when he saw a dog spring up and prance about in a very joyful manner. He could see no reason for the excitement, but a by-stander explained "That is Mr. Fairy's dog. He is quite on board the Alexandria, and as soon as the dog hears the whistle of the boat he knows it, and goes for it."

Sure enough, the dog started off at full speed for the dock where the vessel stopped, and as soon as it touched the wharf he boarded it, and sprang to meet his beloved master. The owner of such a faith fulness ought certainly to be a good master. To most people the whistle of one deambout was much like another, but this shaggy fellow had learned the exact tone of the one for which he watched and waited.

It is still more wonderful that dogs, and perhaps some other animals, seem to understand conversation sometimes, and act upon the hint they get in this way.

A clever little fellow, who always liked to ride with folks, but was often shut up at home, was sitting in the breakfast-room one morning, when the family planned to go to town that day.

"Shall you go with the single or the double team, father?" said one.

"With the double team" was the reply.

Shortly after Dash disappeared and nothing was seen of him until the party had got some four miles on their way, when he meekly crawled out from under the back seat, and wagged his tail in a way that seemed to say: "You certainly can't send me back, now I have got so far." He seemed to know which sleigh to hide in, and could only have learned from the conversation.—Indiana exchange.

A Christmas Pardon.

TWENTY-FIVE years ago—back in the time when most of this generation were children in years—back to almost the first day of the telegraph—there was a cold day and summer, and war and peace, and political changes until the mind is hardly prepared to realize them, when a young man under twenty years of age, living in Detroit, received the awful sentence of solitary confinement for life in the State Prison at Jackson. After a few weeks of the general public forgot him—after a few years his name was scarcely mentioned even by those of his blood and the few who had interested themselves in his behalf.

You can remember back twenty-five years? So can he, but how different his memories! He remembers the day he entered the prison, and how empty it was when the iron door closed out daylight and left him in the midnight darkness for life—left him to stand or sit or lie down in his narrow cell—and those were to be his only companions for many—many years to come. So it is with all the currency afloat. The appliances for carrying on this work must be complete, and nothing but the best of workmanship is allowed by the Government in printing the circulating medium. The designing and engraving rooms, with their delicate machinery and skilled labor, are marvels, and the vaults of steel employed throughout the various branches is such as to render the consummation of any frauds upon the company or the Government in any one responsibility.—Philadelphia Times.

Steaming Food for Stock.

THE conclusion we are inclined to adopt after all our investigations of this subject is that it one has considerable quantities of coarse and inferior fodder to work up advantage, would not be its inferiority by the use of grain, and if the principal object is selling milk by measure, without regard to quality, and if the main number of cows kept is large, say twenty or more, and one expects these conditions to exist several years, it will pay to purchase a good steam-boiler and cook the feed for his cows, but if the number of animals is small, the quality of hay the very best, the grain the same before the blossoms, and the object of feeding is anything but making milk for market, he had better make his stables as warm and comfortable as possible and feed his hay whole and raw rather than incur the expense and extra labor necessary for steaming food.

We also believe that many who have adopted steaming and boiling for the same purpose have had burns warm and comfortable by tighter covering, or by the fire from the furnace, or by both, and have also made the water used by the cows, we would find it but a little puzzling to decide just how much of the improvement in the condition of the animals, the increase in the amount of milk, and the saving of fodder is due to steaming or cooking the food, and how much to the general improvement in the care and management of the animals which usually accompanies the introduction of a steamer on the farm.—N. Y. Farmer.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Farmers' Club gives an instance in which a woman's arm was swelled to an enormous size and painfully inflamed. A poultice was made of stewed pumpkins, which was renewed every fifteen minutes, and in a short time produced a perfect cure. The fever drawn out by the poultices made them extremely offensive as they were taken off.

In choosing silk, especially of foreign manufacture, select a soft fabric in preference to one that may be heavier and stiffer; the former may not at first present so elegant an appearance, but it will wear much the best. The stiff silks soon crack, become "shiny" and slushy, as they owe their superior weight and body to a detitious substance (gum, for example) introduced in the manufacture. A good light is required for a silk counter, and the intelligent purchaser looks at the evenness with which the silk is woven, as well as its excellence of color. Imported silks are more subject to stripes of unevenness in the weaving than those of home make, because the former are woven in the hand-looms, while the latter are by the unerring correctness of machinery.—Rural New Yorker.

DO not forget the poultry on the farm at this busy time. Save the soft food and scraps that are usually thrown away. Put them into the big kettle, cover them with water and keep up a fire heating until they are so thoroughly cooked that the bones may be easily removed. These may be dried and then broken up to feed to the hens during the winter. The meat scraps and gelatin left in the kettle will answer to season many a warm breakfast for the poultry during the early part of winter. Now that the hens get no more insect food, as during the summer, something of the kind is needed for them. If they are to keep as well supplied with eggs for the breakfast table.—Prairie Farmer.

CHICKEN PIE.—Cut the chicken in small pieces and put them on to cook with just water enough to cover them. When about half done take out the chicken and rub some pepper, salt and flour with salt sufficient to make a rich gravy, when cool, roll out your crust and put round the sides of the dish, let it come over the edge, then cut some narrow strips and put round twice on the top of that, put in the chicken and fill the dish about half full of gravy, cover and plenty to eat with the gravy. If there does not seem to be enough, rub some butter with flour and seasoning, and put in small pieces among the chicken, and put in some water. Then cover the dish with a thick crust, cut out a round piece from the center of the pie, then roll some crust a little thicker than you would for a common pie, and cut eight leaves, you can mark round a tablespoon to shape them, mark them throughthe middle and each side to resemble a leaf, then lay on the top of the pie, one in the center and four between those, take a narrow strip of the crust and cut it fine as one edge, then lay it on the edge of the pie and it is properly done you have a very handsome pie. Bake it gradually until the crust is done.

The Yield of Wheat.

THE wheat crop as the chief food grain of the world ought certainly to be grown with profit. If this staple crop is by unfavorable circumstances limited to be an unprofitable one, there must necessarily be something wrong in its management. No other crop can take its place under our present system of farming, for it is in the vast majority of cases made the vehicle for bringing in grass and clover, and its place in the usual rotation could not be filled by any substitute. But there is a universal complaint that there is no profit in growing wheat. This is very generally true, but it does not follow that the blame belongs to the wheat, for with some farmers wheat is by far the most money crop they raise. But these farmers raise far more than the low average of twelve or fifteen bushels per acre. They obtain as a general rule that a yield of less than twenty-five bushels of wheat per acre is grown at a loss, at least in those localities where it is necessary to manure in order to produce the grain. Where the "virgin soil" is still unexhausted and manure is left out entirely in the fields, or is only washed into the streams, there may still be some little profit in twenty bushels per acre, but twenty-five bushels per acre is the measure per acre is used every four years, and time, superphosphate or other fertilizers are applied periodically, in addition to the necessary manure we grow from the unerring correctness of machinery.—Rural New Yorker.

ONE night last week one of our saloon keepers heard a noise in the cellar, and on investigating a light went down and discovered a rat caught by the tail in a sash cord. The rat was about two weight, a good one. It is doubtful if any other State in the whole country could make a better showing than Ohio, although the average yield of wheat is slowly increasing in the older States. It is on the way that wheat can be the most settled on the Western States, California included, and will there be some years yet before it will reach a turning point. The incentive to a better management of the wheat crop is a powerful one. It is the necessity for the means of living in comfort. A farmer who raises twenty bushels of wheat per acre can hardly be said to live, he exists but cannot live in comfort upon such an income nor can he make the most of his opportunities for education. Necessity must force him to improve his mode of culture and to prepare the ground very much better than he has been before. A low price for wheat relieves the American farmer from much foreign competition and is usually a good thing, and we shall see the price of wheat advance much above the present rates unless as a consequence of a light yield. Even a doubled yield is equal to a doubled price, and we can safely produce such a crop, inasmuch as with the high rents paid by English farmers on the same profit is obtained wheat-growing in that country, which is our best endeavor for wheat, is yearly decreasing in extent. To produce this doubled crop is not impossible; the fact that some farmers do it proves that others may do it also.—American Agriculturist.

Why and How to Drain Land.

ON flat lands, where the soil is clay and subsoil of an impervious character, and where the crops have been submerged with stagnant water during the season, the farmer is not easily induced to believe that money invested in the improvement of the fertility of their cultivatable ground can be made to pay a profit. Yet such is the case as the amount were invested in agricultural implements or mortgages. If a farmer has a piece of land that is worth but little to him, and which he cannot make very productive improvements permanently increase the income of his field only enough to pay him a fair interest on the investment, he is not to look upon it as a good investment, and he must look solely to the increase in the daily crops to ascertain whether it is best or not. In annual crops, like wheat, barley, corn, oats, etc., a yield of extra measure will raise $100 worth of extra produce, if he can fair business transactions, the cost of the land, $500 worth, the good as the having, tank, but a market gardener expects and often realizes ten times that sum on such an investment. Farmers often send ready money to buy when cattle and corn are cheap, and to be sold at their best time, and also other articles as are not perishable for a fair price. Some of the farmers at New York Mills have made a good thing out of corn in the fall of 1873 at sixty-four cents a bushel, while the poorer men were obliged to sell their land, rendering useful the broad acres that would otherwise be valueless. A little close observation after the crops are made and possible can determine where the main drains and the ones leading into them should be located. The grade of the lateral or side drains should be one inch in one hundred feet; but two to three inches would be better. A spirit-level and a straight-edge five or six feet in length will enable one, with a little calculation, to determine the proper grade.

DEFIANCE, a common plow and two horses will greatly expedite the digging, as much of the surface soil may thus be thrown out. After this a stone, a long dooblebree six or seven feet in length may be used; this to be of sufficient length for the horses to walk outside of the ditch. To the doobletree a chain should be attached so that a small sapplee plow may be fastened to it, and by driving the horses back and forth in the furrows obviates the use of the pick entirely, and the soil can thus be readily got out. The ordinary prejudice to frand was intended. Appeals were taken to the Court of Common Pleas, and after wards to the Supreme Court, which in the Court of Appeals, and these all affirmed the original decision of the Justices of the Peace. In the suit $10,000 damages in legal expenses have been paid.

Everyone recollects the time when all great speeches were reported and published in full, whereas at present the most brilliant of orators may consider himself lucky if the summary of his utterances occupies half a column. During the Presidential campaign which preceded the war, while Wm. L. He consented to go out of his route for this purpose, and, as this would be his first speech during the contest, everybody was on the qui vive to hear his views on the mighty questions then agitating the country. The Baltimore newspapers determined to furnish verbatim reports, and five stenographers were dispatched by the morning train for F——— Junction, where they would meet another train to take them to the fair-ground, twenty-six miles away. Four of the scribes were duly met, but the fifth a Falstaff. They had agreed, in the cars, to take no unfair advantage of each other, no matter what happened. When they arrived at F——— Junction their dismay may be imagined when they perceived that the connecting train had gone. Nothing was visible in the neighborhood but an old-fashioned country carriole, in the shafts of which stood a lank, melancholy horse. The four thin scribes with a shout made a simultaneous rush and got into the wagon, filling it completely. Poor Falstaff panted along, lasting the oath and fuming at their treachery, but with mockery and derision they waved him away and ordered the driver to proceed. In the midst of his anguish a thought struck one of the fat men to cut a notch in a corn-stalk, and sounded the trigger of a rifle with his might and main. The death was instantaneous, and brains and blood were scattered about the room.

SIX years ago Messrs. Wolcott, Johnston & Co., of Fredonia, N. Y., sold to Lewis D. Mount, a farmer, a twenty-five cent package of what they represented as seed that would produce excellent early turnips. The seed brought forth but turnips of such poor quality that Mr. Mount was compelled to feed them to his cattle. Mr. Mount sued for damages before a Justice of the Peace, and was granted a judgment of ninety-nine dollars damages. The case was carried back and forth in the furrows obviates the use of the pick entirely, and the soil can thus be readily got out. The ordinary prejudice to frand was intended. What Shall We Do?

It is no wonder that we hear this question on every corner. So many are dying and dozens of diseases of the brain to those days that everyone is alarmed, and is asking: "What shall we do?" There is alarm on the countenance of diseases of the head, a whistling sensation when closing up suddenly, a bad, "all gone" sensation at the pit of the stomach. Fix the evening of the show, what's feeling like a heat after eating, pains in the back, sides and chest, at times, with cramps in the bowels stasis, lightheaded ness, sometimes vomited with loss appetite poor, and when food is eaten it creates a distress; the skin, often a fine, brownish color, and sometimes, eyes sunken and ringed with yellow, appetite doubtful, evil and bad dreams. When any of these symptoms are present you should be lost in only a proper remedy. The one that we have known to be private to the most certainly is the LIVER OF INVIGORATOR of Dr. Walker, 324 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Dr. Walker is a regular graduate, and has been for many years a specialist in the treatment of diseases of the liver, stomach and blood. Invest Your Money Where It Will Jingle Most.

IN an article on the subject of "Money Labor vs. Capital" H. F. French states that in the New England States a farmer has $1,000 he either puts it in the savings bank or buys more land, and rarely can he do better. He can put it in stock in some farm more productive. Such a practice ruins the agriculture of our country. Large portions of the profits of the soil cannot be induced to believe that money invested in the improvement of the fertility of their cultivatable ground can be made to pay a profit. Yet such is the case as the amount were invested in agricultural implements or mortgages. The Wrong "Snoozer."

AN evening or two since some of the employees of the Ophir Company found an intoxicated man sleeping off his evening's allowance of "tanantic juice" among the shavings in some of the temporary shops near the works. They had some trouble in getting the fellow aroused, and more in getting him to comprehend where he was, or rather that he was not in a place where he legitimately belonged.

It was determined by the men who found the lousy party that they would give him such a fright that he would never again venture within a mile of the works. Therefore, they held their mouths and they had positive orders to kill any person found about the works after dark. They said it was a thing they did get like to do, but the works had lately been destroyed by fire and the company were not in a humor to take any more chances of—their orders were imperative.

The man tried to beg off, saying that he did not know how he came into the shed, and swearing by all that was good and bad he meant no harm, but all would not do.

He was seized and dragged some distance from the hill toward the Masonic cemetery, to a place in the open country where five or six rifled cannon belonging to the Nevada artillery have been stored ever since the day of the fire. Two stout men then seized the trembling "snoozer," and placing his head in front of the muzzle of one of the guns told him he had but three minutes to live, as they were about to blow his head off.

Again the man begged for mercy, saying that he had only taken a drop too much and got into the shed to know not how, but certainly with out any evil intentions.

Said a man who had just taken his place at the breech of the gun, and was loading most matches from his vest pocket: "If you have any word to leave for a wife, an old father and mother or any friend or country you will do well to make known your wishes."

"I reckon I hain't got any wife or old father or mother or anybody else as cares a chaw of tobacco about me."

"Well, but have you no dying wish, no dying request?"

"You bet; mine's grand. I reckon I has. Shill I? You don't get off that way!"

"Oh, how? said the stranger, "your pardon is granted, you are free. Now, you know you were picked up Ely Slimer from the Mundy Rock of the Ophir." And suddenly shaking himself free of the hand of the men who held him across the muzzle of the gun he ran down the hill like a frightened deer, and in the twinkling of an eye was out of sight.

Warm Postscript.—Pat Jenkens went to fight, they say, and succeeded in taking a scalp and skunk away out of sight. ANOTHER January thaw as we go to press.

NEW Goods at Carpenter & Bartholomew's

QUARTERLY MEETING in this village next Sabbath.

THE Good Templars are doing much good already.

√ The Indians made maple sugar during the late thaw.

SCHOOL Books and Stationery at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

H. O. ROSE and A. S. Loe, of Petoskey, were in town Saturday.

EIGHTY thousand copies of Will Carleton's poems have been sold.

THE most glaring form of ignorance is shown in the ignorance of one's own ignorance.

√ GOOD TEMPLARISM is being revived at Traverse City, and a lodge is to be organized there.

√ A daily line of boats will be run between Frankfort and Milwaukee next summer by Mr. Goodrich.

THE farmers of Flint are plowing, and say that upon turning the soil at the usual depth the ground is found as dry as in June.

Mr. Denton, of Kenosha, is in this region, getting out shipping wood. He pays cash for wood anywhere on beach of Interior lake.

√ It is claimed by parties who pretend to know, that the State Camp Meeting Grounds have at last been definitely located at Petoskey.

√ THE Good Templars will meet at the new Masonic Hall, over Nettleton's wagon shop, next Friday evening. A general attendance is desired.

SENATORS Ferry and Christiancy have presented to the Senate several memorials from citizens of Michigan asking for soldiers' bounties, lighthouses, and pensions.

THE Herald says: Rumor says that Hon. S. C. Moffatt has fallen heir to quite a snug little fortune. To whatever extent this report may be true we tender our congratulations.

√ HOTEL LEGAL.—We are again compelled by circumstances to take our meals at the Fountain City House, and as a consequence, Dick has been compelled to hire another cook and two more waiters.

√ THE Postmaster has completed the improvements at the postoffice, and boy and drawer accommodation could now be furnished for a place twice the size of Charlevoix. It is hoped that every citizen will now rent a box.

VESSEL BUILDING.—Timothy D. and Stephen Smith, of this place, are getting out timber for a vessel of forty feet keel, and will have her ready to launch by the opening of navigation.

THE conduct of a certain boy in the primary department of the village school warrants his prompt and permanent expulsion from the school, and we hope the School Board will see that it is done.

JUDGE HAMADEN, having entered into a business partnership with L. H. Gage, at Traverse City, is actively engaged in the practice of the law. Judge Hatch has entered upon his judicial duties.

NICHOLS, the "Spring Harbor merchant," has left the country, and the printer mourns to the tune of about $25. Several citizens call in occasionally and weep with us. A sad wail ascends on such occasions.

√ Hon. John Nichols, of the Whitewater Manufacturing Company, arrived in town Friday, on business connected with the milling interests here. They will not stock their mill here as heavily as heretofore.

FRESH Roll Butter at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

√ THE Charlevoix Sentinel having discarded the old type on which it has heretofore been printed, and which has been in use from about the year one, comes to us as bright and fresh as a baby in a new frock.—Herald.

A. BUTTARS, Esq., leaves town this week to visit his relatives at Port Austin, and will be absent about three weeks. He will attend the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, which is to be held at Grand Rapids on the 25th of this month.

JAMES VICK, has sent us his Floral Guide for 1876. It is a beautiful catalogue of flower and vegetable seeds, and has a superb colored frontispiece, and, besides, an illustrated sketch of a journey in California. It is published quarterly, at 25 cents a year. Address James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

CHARLEY NEWMAN says the bust of Seward which stands over one of the school house entrances will fall and get "busted" if not straightened up before long, and we believe him. It leans to such an extent that a slight jar would precipitate it to the floor.

√ NEW MASONIC HALL.—The Masonic Fraternity of this place have leased for a term of five years, the upper portion of H. C. Nettleton's wagon shop, and are fitting it up for their lodge room. They will enter it about the first of March, or sooner. The building is 20x31 in size, giving a fine little hall 19x22, and a suit of ante rooms occupying eight feet of the length. The Fraternity propose to fit it up in a neat and tasty manner, and the walls and ceiling are already being newly plastered and calcomined. The Good Templars will also occupy the room.

The Sentinel and Mr. Hubbell's "Third-Term Vote."

THE SENTINEL has been classed among those journals in the Ninth Congressional District which censure Representative Hubbell for his vote on the third term resolution. The classification is the outcome of our endorsement of the Herald's remarks on the subject, and is warrantable and therefore correct. So far so good. But, while we agreed with our cotemporary as to the completion of the bare fact, we do not agree with the editor in his subsequent brief comment on Mr. Hubbell's reasons for his action, as set forth in his letter to the Herald. The latter, in our estimation, places him just where he should stand upon a platform of broad and lofty contempt for this class of Democratic humbuggery, and more especially as for the manner and pecuniary introduction. His letter makes it entirely satisfactory to us, inasmuch as it radically changes the aspect of the matter as it was naked-ly presented to our judgment on the first report.

LADIES' and Gents' underwear, Ladies' felt shirts, at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

THE Grand Traverse Herald says: "D. R. Joslyn has been appointed Prosecuting Attorney of Emmet county, in place of C. R. Ford, who is said to be 'now absent.' Any one anxious to know of his whereabouts can ascertain by writing to W. A. Smith, of the Charlevoix Sentinel."

LOST.—Rev. A. P. Moore, the Presiding Elder, lost a diary somewhere between Bird's settlement and this place one day last week. It contained two drafts amounting to $500, which are worthless to any person except himself. Therefore the finder will confer a favor by leaving it at this office for him.

BY the Lansing Republican we learn that forty-eight County Treasurers have reported to the Auditor General a list of 1500 dealers in spirituous and 687 dealers in malt liquors, and report a tax collected of $209,892.34. A business must be enormous which can be prosecuted successfully and pay an annual tax of over a quarter of a million of dollars.

√ DRAMATIC.—The Young Folks' Dramatic Club, of this place, have leased the old store building of W. Clifford, on the South side of Round Lake, and are fitting it up for an entertainment hall. On Saturday evening, Jan. 29th, they will reproduce "The Commercial College Graduate," and introduce the farce entitled, "The Crooked Mottled Family." Robert Miller, Esq., is still manager.

CARPENTER & BARTHOLOMEW are selling cheaper than ever, to correspond with the close times.

CARPENTER & BARTHOLOMEW have their goods well sorted up in every department.

HERE is an idea for our Pine Lake people to revolve in their craniums. At the spring of 1875 the tide of political sentiment in Charlevoix county went in favor of Democracy solely as a means of taking revenge on the Republican party because of their apparent neglect of our harbor interests. Now, if we fail, it can be laid only at the door of the "Confederate" House of Representatives. The rebel whelps in Congress will want to pension Confederate soldiers, and the national commerce will fare poorly at their hands.

FROM ELK RAPIDS.—A friend at Elk Rapids writes us as follows: "Can you tell me what is the matter with our Progress man? Only the other day he wished to ratify the people that he had telegraphing for the Western Union Telegraph Company, by mailing a sign up over his door. After a few finger bruises, a fall or two from a three-legged chair, and, I am afraid, a few mild blessings upon the axe used as a substitute for a hammer, he finally got it up and stood off to survey his job, when his ears were greeted with a peal of laughter from a house over the way. The poor man only looked once at the fair owner of such a jolly laugh, and threw at the sign. Then it was immense to see the way he grasped the axe and went for that "telegraphing done here." The sign was bottom side up!

A large assortment of Table Linen and white goods can be found at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

Taxation Swindling.

As is well known, the lands of the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroads are now taxable, like other lands, or those of residents. The justice of this, of course, is not questioned, and the railroad authorities have accepted the situation and in good faith are doing their best to pay their taxes when due, at the earliest practicable moment, in order that the towns may receive their money with little or no delay. But there seems to be an organized effort on the part of many residents—themselves exempt from taxation—to go for non-resident lands to fullest extent of the law—but not satisfied with this, they even go beyond, and in defiance of law. In his investigations of the taxes of 1875, in the 120 townships in which the G. R. & I. R. R. have lands, a monstrous task, involving about 700,000 acres, the Secretary of the Land Department, Hon. P. H. L. Pierce, himself a pretty thorough lawyer, had reason to believe, in fact he knew, that some localities needed looking into pretty sharp, and making known his surmises to them. D. Darwin Hughes, the solicitor of the company, that gentleman detailed from his corps of able assistants L. P. Earle, Esq., one of our rising attorneys, to go up north to Kalkaska county and "learn how it was done." After spending a week in that flourishing country he has just returned with a memorandum full of facts and figures, the result of which was that M. Hughes in consideration of the premises, notified the Land Department that the special highway and township taxes in Kalkaska township were void; that the township and school taxes in Excelsior township were void; that the school house and law library tax in Cold Spring township were void; that the school and bridge tax in Boardman township were void, and several towns yet to investigate. Unless these towns relinquish their claims to these illegal assessments, suits will be commenced against them. The Department do not intend to suffer this swindle any longer, and if nothing but litigation will bring the irresponsible taxing power to its senses, the solicitor says they shall have it to their heart's content.

The Department have under advisement several towns in Antrim, Lake, Wexford and some other counties, to which their respects will be paid. Some of the beauties of the present mode of fleecing non-resident land owners will be brought out in these investigations that will astonish the reader.—G. R. Eagle.

BOYS AND GIRLS—Fox, Rose & Buttars have those slate cleaners, 5 cts each, just what you need.

MARRIED.—On the 10th inst., at St. Patrick's Church, Detroit, by Rev Dr. O'Reilly, A. O. D. McCabe, of this place, was married to Miss Emily O'Neil, of Detroit, and a daughter of Richard O'Neill, Esq., of Marion, in this county. The editor has been favored with a rich morsel of the bride's cake. Mr. McCabe and his bride have our earnest wishes that their wedded life may be one of happiness and prosperity, and we are sure our citizens, one and all, extend the same good will.

RENAWAY AT TRAVERSE CITY.—Our special correspondent at Traverse City gives us the following particulars of a runaway whic. occurred at that place Friday evening: Burt Cook and a young lady were out riding, and indulged in a race down the street. When opposite Hamilton & Milliken's store, the cutter tipped over, and the horse ran over the bridge, around Hannah, Lay & Co's mill, back over the bridge, up Front street, crossed the lower bridge, and ran up the railroad until he came to the railroad bridge. He then ran fifty feet on the bridge and fell through, damaging his legs quite badly. Cook and the young lady escaped uninjured. The horse is a valuable one, belonging to J. Dunn.

SEVERAL more Union soldiers in the service of the National House of Representatives were discharged on Friday, to make room for ex-Confederates. A corresponding number of Democrats will walk the plank, if the President is true to his word. The veterans will be given positions in the departments.

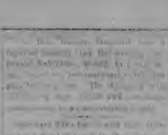
Bristol Clothes Washer



Patented Nov. 16, 1869.

The Best Machine in the world. I will warrant it to do more and whiter washing in less time, and with less labor than any other machine or washboard in existence. It is simple and not liable to get out of order. It washes and rinses a tub full of clothes in two minutes. Any child can work it easily. It will last a lifetime. Also Skirt, Cuff and Wristband Pressers, in three sizes, for family use. All who see the machine in operation are delighted with it.

Try it, and if any family is satisfied with the Bristol Washer.

If not for sale in your place, send us $7.00 and we will send you a Washer by express, or, if you prefer, will send for C.O.D.

√ GOOD TEMPLARISM is being revived at Traverse City, and a lodge is to be organized there.

√ A daily line of boats will be run between Frankfort and Milwaukee next summer by Mr. Goodrich.

√ THE farmers of Flint are plowing, and say that upon turning the soil at the usual depth the ground is found as dry as in June.

CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL.

Terms, $2.00 per Annum. | Devoted to the Interests of Charlevoix County. | Always in Advance.

Vol. VII. No. 38. | CHARLEVOIX, MICH., JAN. 18. 1876. | Whole No., 349

MR. DEATON, of Roseaux, is in this region, getting out shipping wood. He pays cash for wood anywhere on beach of interior lake.

√ It is claimed by parties who pretend to know, that the State Camp Meeting Grounds have at last been definitely located at Petoskey.

√ The Good Templars will meet at the new Masonic Hall, over Nettleton's wagon shop, next Friday evening. A general attendance is desired.

SENATORS Ferry and Christiancy have presented in the Senate several memorials from citizens of Michigan asking for soldiers' bounties, lighthouses, and pensions.

THE Herald says: Rumor says that Hon. S. C. Moffatt has fallen heir to quite a snug little fortune. To whatever extent this report may be true we tender our congratulations.

√ HOTEL LIFE.—We are again compelled by circumstances to take our meals at the Fountain City House, and as a consequence, Dick has been compelled to hire another cook and two more waiters.

THE Postmaster has completed the improvements at the postoffice, and boy and drawer accommodation could now be furnished for a place twice the size of Charlevoix. It is hoped that every citizen will now rent a box.

VESSEL BUILDING.—Timothy D. and Stephen Smith, of this place, are getting out timber for a vessel of forty feet keel, and will have her ready to launch by the opening of navigation.

THE conduct of a certain boy in the primary department of the village school warrants his prompt and permanent expulsion from the school, and we hope the School Board will see that it is done.

JUDGE HAMMELL, having entered into a business partnership with L. H. Gage, at Traverse City, is actively engaged in the practice of the law. Judge Hatch has entered upon his judicial duties.

NICHOLS, the "Spring Harbor merchant," has left the country, and the printer mourns to the tune of about $25. Several citizens call in occasionally and weep with us. A sad wail ascends on such occasions.

√ Hon. John Nichols, of the Whitewater manufacturing Company, arrived in town Friday, on business connected with the milling interests here. They will not stock their mill here as heartily as heretofore.

FRESH Roll Butter at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

√ THE Charlevoix Sentinel having discarded the old type on which it has been before here been printed, and which has been in use from about the year one, comes to us as bright and fresh as a baby in a new frock.—Herald.

A. BUTTARS, Esq., leaves town this week to visit his relatives at Port Austin and will be absent about three weeks. He will attend the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, which is to be held at Grand Rapids on the 25th of this month.

JAMES VICK, has sent us his Floral Guide for 1876. It is a beautiful catalogue of flower and vegetable seeds, and has a superb colored frontpiece, and, besides, an illustrated sketch of a journey in California. It is published quarterly, at 25 cents a year. Address James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

CHARLEY NEWMAN says the bust of Seward which stands over one of the school house entrances will fall and get "busted" if not straightened up before long, and we believe him. It leans to such an extent that a slight jar would precipitate it to the floor.

√ NEW MASONIC HALL.—The Masonic Fraternity of this place have leased for a term of five years, the upper portion of D. C. Nettleton's wagon shop, and are fitting it up for their lodge room. They will enter it about the first of March, or sooner. The building is 20x31 in size, giving a fine little hall 19x22, and a suit of ante rooms occupying eight feet of the length. The Fraternity propose to fit it up in a neat and tasty manner, and the walls and ceiling are already being newly plastered and calcimined. The Good Templars will also occupy the room.

The Sentinel and Mr. Hubbell's "Third-Term Vote."

THE SENTINEL has been classed among those journals in the Ninth Congressional District which censure Representative Hubbell for his vote on the third term resolution. The classification is the outcome of our endorsement of the Herald's remarks on the subject, and is warrantable and therefore correct. So far so good. But, while we agreed with our contemporary as to the complexion of the bare fact, we do not agree with the editor in his subsequent brief comment on Mr. Hubbell's reasons for his action, as set forth in his letter to the Herald. The latter, in our estimation, places him just where he should stand upon a platform of fraud and lofty contempt for this class of Democratic humbuggle, and more especially so for the manner and plea of his jurisprudence. His letter makes it entirely satisfactory to us, inasmuch as it radically changes the aspect of the matter as it was nakedly presented to our judgment in the first report.

LADIES' and Gents' underwear, Ladies' felt shirts, at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

The Grand Traverse Herald says: "D. R. Joslyn has been appointed Prosecuting Attorney of Emmet county, in place of C. R. Ford, who is said to be now absent." Any one anxious to know of his whereabouts can ascertain by writing to W. A. Smith, of the Charlevoix Sentinel."

LOST.—Rev. A. P. Moore, the Presiding Elder, lost a dbery somewhere between Bird's settlement and this place one day last week. It contained two drafts amounting to $500, which are worthless to any person except himself. Therefore the finder will confer a favor by leaving it at this office for him.

BY the Lansing Republican we learn that forty-eight County Treasurers have returned to the Auditor General a list of 1500 dealers in spirituous and 687 dealers in malt liquors, and report a tax collected of $269,822.34. A business must be enormous which can be prosecuted successfully and pay an annual tax of over a quarter of a million of dollars.

√ DRAMATIC.—The Young Folks' Dramatic Club, of this place, have leased the old store building of W. Clifford, on the South side of Round Lake, and are fitting it up for an entertainment hall. On Saturday evening, Jan. 29th, they will reproduce "The Commercial College Graduate," and introduce the farce entitled, "The Crooked Mouthed Family." Robert Miller, Esq., is still manager.

CARPENTER & BARTHOLOMEW are selling cheaper than ever, to correspond with the close times.

CARPENTER & BARTHOLOMEW have their goods well sorted up in every department.

HERE is an idea for our Pine Lake people to revolve in their craniums: At the spring of 1875 the tide of political sentiment in Charlevoix county went in favor of Democracy solely as a means of taking revenge on the Republican party because of their apparent neglect of our harbor interests. Now if we fail, it can be laid only at the door of the "Confederate" House of Representatives. The rebel whelps in Congress will want to pension Confederate soldiers, and the national commerce will fare poorly at their hands.

FROM ELK RAPIDS.—A friend at Elk Rapids writes us as follows: "Can you tell me what is the matter with our Progress man? Only the other day he wished to ratify the people that he did telegraphing for the Western Union Telegraph Company, by nailing a sign up over his door. After a few finger brains, a fall or two from a three-legged chair, and, I am afraid, a few mild blessings upon the axe used as a substitute for a hammer, he finally got it up and stood off to survey his job, when his ears were greeted with a peal of laughter from a house over the way. The poor man only looked once at the fair owner of such a jolly laugh, and then at the sign. Then it was humorous to see the way he grabbed the axe and went for that "telegraphing done here." The sign was bottom side up!

Taxation Swindling.

As is well known, the lands of the various land grant railroads are now taxable, like other lands, or those of residents. The justice of this, of course, is not questioned, and the railroad authorities have accepted the situation and in good faith are doing their level best to pay their taxes when due, at the earliest practicable moment. In order that the towns may receive their money with little or no delay. But there seems to be an organized effort on the part of many residents—themselves exempt from taxation—to go for non-resident lands to fullest extent of the law—but not satisfied with this, they even go beyond, and in defiance of law. In his investigations of the taxes of 1875, in the 120 townships in which the immense land grants lie, a monstrous task, involving about 700,000 acres, the Secretary of the Land Department, Hon. P. H. Pierce, himself a pretty thorough lawyer, had reason to believe, in fact he knew, that some localities needed looking into pretty sharp, and making known his surmises to Hon. D. Darwin Hughes, the solicitor of the company, that gentleman detailed from his corps of able assistants L. P. Earle, Esq., one of our rising attorneys, to go up north to Kalkaska county and "learn how it was done." After spending a week it that flourishing country he has just returned with a memorandum full of facts and figures, the result of which was that M. Hughes in consideration of the premises, notified the Land Department that the special highway and township taxes in Kalkaska township were void; that the township and school taxes in Excelsior township were void; that the school house and law library tax in Cold Spring township were void; that the school and bridge tax in Boardman township were void, and several towns yet to investigate. Unless these towns relinquish their claims to these illegal assessments, suits will be commenced against them. The Department do not intend to suffer this swindle any longer, and if nothing but litigation will bring the irresponsible taxing power to its senses, the solicitor says they shall have it to their heart's content.

The Department have under advisement several towns in Antrim, Lake, Wexford and some other counties, to which their respects will be paid. Some of the beauties of the present mode of fleecing non-resident land owners will be brought out in these investigations that will astonish the reader.—G. R. Eagle.

MARRIED.—On the 10th inst., at St. Patrick's Church, Detroit, by Rev Dr. O'Reilly, A. O. D. McCabe, of this place, was married to Miss Emily O'Neil, of Detroit, and a daughter of Richard O'Neil, Esq., of Marine, in this county. The editor has been furnished with a rich morsel of the bride's cake. Mr. McCabe and his bride have our earnest wishes that their wedded life may be one of happiness and prosperity, and we are sure our citizens, one and all, extend the same good will.

RUNAWAY AT TRAVERSE CITY.—Our special correspondent at Traverse City gives us the following particulars of a runaway which occurred at that place Friday evening: Burt Cook and a young lady were out riding, and indulged in a race down the street. When opposite Hamilton & Milliken's store, the cutter tipped over, and the horse ran over the bridge, around Hannah, Lay & Co.'s mill, back over the bridge, up Front street, crossed the lower bridge, and ran up the railroad until he came to the railroad bridge. He then ran forty feet on the bridge and fell through, damaging his legs quite badly. Cook and the young lady escaped uninjured. The horse is a valuable one, belonging to J. Dunn.

SEVERAL more Union soldiers in the service of the National House of Representatives were discharged on Friday, to make room for ex-Confederates. A corresponding number of Democrats will walk the plank, if the President is true to his word. The veterans will be given positions in the departments.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

The Road to the Nation's Pocket—Starkum is at Loggerheads!

A Man Who Lost $500,000 and Didn't Know It.

Another Christmas—Barnum on Exhibition.

All Sorts.

From our Own Correspondent.

New York, Jan 14, 1876

To the Editor of Sentinel:

The past week shows that a geographical discovery has been made which will probably be more highly lauded by the average American than the finding of that optimist "North west Passage," in the search for which so many Arctic explorers have lost their lives. I refer to the new thorough fare to the national pocket which those shrewd Centennial Commissioners have hastily cut and effected, and which is through the legislature and executive mansion. That big dinner at Parker's has did the business. Congress has and dinner $10,000 worth, went back to Washington to pick the ill meth, began to acknowledge the high worth of the Centennial enterprise, and now when sits in that calm, benevolent frame of mind which usually follows a "square meal," unanimously vote the million and a half appropriation that those hospitable Commissioners wanted.

Now how much grander that is than spending the $10,000 in lobbying—button-holing the whole House by turns, feeling this man, promising that one, and threatening the other. Verily the invention of our Quaker brethren is a good one and worthy of imitation; and as gentlemen of Mr. Scott's genius usually make know to some, we may soon expect to see an Washington embarked for Texas for a rousing champagne dinner previous to voting that Texas Pacific subsidy that has hung fire so long.

But just at present Mr Scott has his hands full of other matters, looking himself and Philadelphia against Vanderbilt and New York in the race for Western freight traffic, and attending to that remarkable squabble of the Pennsylvania road with the new Air-line between Philadelphia and this city. I presume the result of these naval preceedings will be known by the time this reaches you, but at this writing the fight is a prominent topic of conversation here. The idea of two corporations getting up a private little over a track crossing, using their laborers for infantry and their locomotives for furious cavalry charges, is certainly original enough to command attention.

In these hard times and days of general complaining it is refreshing to hear of a business that can be robbed of half a million and never know it. Such an one, if the papers are to be believed, is that of Babbitt, the soap-maker, who is prosecuting two former employes for larceny, of something like that amount, he having recently learned of his loss by accident. Whew! He must use his soap to clean Aladdin's lamp with.

It may not be greatly understood that we have two Christmas days here in New York, but such is the fact, the members of the Greek Church having duly celebrated the "other" one on January 6th. The way that happens is, that the Greek faith holds to an old chronology, while the rest of christendom prefers to run by the new one. I should have been happy to go over to the Greeks temporarily for the sake of another chance to hang up my stocking, but understanding that old santa claus only endorses Dec. 25th, don't think it worth while.

The illustrious Mayor of Bridgeport, Mr. P. T. Barnum, has sold his wild animals and all the other appurtenances of his big Hippodrome, but can no more live out of the show business than can a fish out of water. So for lack of other attractions he is now exhibiting himself with considerable effect. He calls his caravan a lecture-tour this time, but that don't matter. People want to see him at least as much as to hear him and they turn out well, in this city and Brooklyn at least, and the Prince of Showmen is successful, as usual.

The case against Tweed having received another set-back through some technical error, the question is beginning to be raised whether such piecemeal bungling on the part of the prosecution can be entirely accidental. From present appearances the heir will have to receive its estimated 10 per cent on the nine, at the hands of posterity. It may be, however, that the proposed new City Charter now under consideration at Albany, will, if adopted, help this matter to finality as it will materially clear some very wholesome reforms in various departments, that of the law among the rest.

If it would stop the existing dissensions that disgrace the City Council, it would do a good work. Two opposing factions have organized and are squabbling for recognition, one with the endorsement of the Mayor, and the other without it. The former has possession of the chamber, and demonstrates its fitness for office by so conducting itself as regular meetings, as to render threats of calling in the police necessary to the preservation of order.

It has long been the fashion to consider Com Vanderbilt a crusty old curmudgeon, with but scant B-columns in his pigeon-hole development; but his letter to the trustees of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, published a few days since, should let he out be as misunderstood when he pleases, as cheerful himself dispensing with a comparatively small thousand to the institution mentioned, his supplemental bequests leaves rankled in no growing measure, and he has continued to enlarge the amount, till now, as shown by his letter, he has given to the magnificent sum of $700,000, and that accordingly, but accompanied with words of sweet agreement and appreciation to my name, gee.

The trustees having failed to the chosen path of manual exercise to strike boss rail in the place now named, there is not much chance to misunderstand to mean "Pique," unless Chas. "Bob Wright" as "Corneille," will half their own through Faulkner the latter's son must suffer an interruption at the collegiate pigeon-way, to share Mr. Hoe to fill several provincial engagements, in comedy. All Wood's Museum, a new situation of "Pique and Marriage" has been introduced, and promises equal interest. Mr. Lester Wallack, who for several years has devoted himself to successful management of the theatre bearing his name, has returned to its boards, where he is enthusiastically welcomed. During his past week he has been giving his Bengal rendition of Col. John Wilks in "Rosedale."

It is currently reported that Mr William H. Kemp, well known as a Western manager, is in negotiation with the proprietors of Niblo's Garden for re-opening this popular theatre. It is to be hoped this rumor is correct, as Mr K is a most successful man in that capacity.

Delivering Hall has witnessed the closing encounters of Van Lew's annual series, which I have been unfeelingly successful; and also the first annual meeting of the season for the Prospect Hose Company No 1 Chelsea, in which Mr. Hugh Keeler pleasantly, and which has already begun magnificent work, by rescuing from their perilous and cruel bondage, two of the many little child sacrifices who are forced to risk their lives in block tank performances, to put money in the pockets of their hard hearted proprietors or agents.

Dr. Hollander's stunning show of "Seventeen Sick" which appears in "Hamlet's Mantle" last year is now being dramatized under the supervision of the author, and will be placed upon the stage in due time.

RAMS.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" One answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life giving principle a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable Q.alities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease and relieving the afflicted. They are a gentle Purgative as well as Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Letter from Hon. J. A. Hubbell —The Third Term Resolution.

The following is the letter of Representative Hubbell to the Grand Traverse Herald, in answer to its criticism of his actions in the third term question:

House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C., Dec 29th, 1875

HON. P. C. LEACH,

Editor Grand Traverse Herald.

Dear Sir:—I notice in your issue of 23d inst. an editorial on the third term question introduced by Mr. Springer, of Illinois, and passed under the operation of the previous question, to which you regret that my vote was rendered against it and intimate that, while I doubt less sincerely expressed my individual views, yet I failed to give a fair expression of those of my constituents.

You are too old a legislator not to know that a negative vote, under the circumstances, no debate being allowed, was in the nature of a protest against the consideration of a question which had not been referred to the House, and was in no sense an expression of opinion as to the merits of the pending proposition

While I do not care for n o elty and should not notice any structure on my course, aside by others than my constituents, I must be pardoned if I do called your attention and in suggesting that they were probably indulged in without giving to the adverse criticism you make that consideration which it deserves.

I hold that, inasmuch as the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency rests entirely with the people of the several states, by means of delegates chosen from the people, (as does my own nomination as Representative from the 9th Congressional District of Michigan) any attempt on the part of a Congress, elected two years prior to a Presidential contest, while acting in a legislative capacity, to forestall that action is a piece of impertinence as unjustifiable as would be an affirmative vote on a resolution recommending the people to again re-nominate them.

The people, for nearly half a century, have claimed and exercised, in political conventions, the right to pass upon resolutions similar to the one to which you refer, and for their representatives in Congress now to usurp this prerogative is in no sense short that I can fairly give it serious consideration.

If the opposition desire that cheap cost of fame gained by introducing and rushing through without debate under the previous question such humbugging resolutions, so far as I am concerned they are welcome to it. I content myself with looking after and doing my utmost to serve the interests of my district, and in the meanwhile shall vote As—than disagree to all such propositions when they are either impertinent or C11 to commend themselves to my judgment.

If the people of the 9th District send me here to help make, or unmake, candidates for the Presidency, there is a serious wonder a thing between us, and I am the wrong man for the place.

My limited observations on the drift of political affairs at this juncture convince me that, instead of the people running after the politicians for the purpose of finding out what to do or whom to support for this or that office, things are entirely reversed. It is the politicians who are all at sea and almost entirely in the dark as to what the people will do.

You will therefore pardon me if, in the capacity of legislator, I do my duty towards the people of the 9th District, upholding their interests, and leave President making alone.

I beg to assure you that, whenever that respectable portion of the people of this country, who represent and compose the Republican party, shall in their wisdom put in nomination a candidate for President, I shall acquiesce in their judgement, and as one of them do my utmost to secure his election.

Nearly every State, which has recently held party conventions, has pronounced against a third term; President Grant has by letter defined his position, and no one has ever truthfully heard of any attempt on the part of friends to secure his re nomination. Yet unless the Republican party, both in Congress and out, profess every act with an anti-third-term resolution, a grave doubt is raised as to its meaning, by opponents and carping friends.

There is neither reason or wisdom in this, for the Republican party is not a creature of to day; it has a glorious record of faith kept with the people and of promises fulfilled, and should stand upon that record with full confidence in the future—trusting its representatives, as in the past, for the faithful discharge of every delegated to them.

As a private citizen I don't mind expressing my opinion on the Presidential question.

I regard the success of the Republican party and of Republican principles so essential to the welfare and prosperity of this nation that I am in favor of any man, true to those principles, who can be elected, and I am quite willing that the people, represented by delegates assembled in convention, shall, surrounded by the influences and wisdom of Congress, name the man.

I remain, with respect,
Your obedient servant,
JAY A. HUBBELL

MICHIGAN'S FAVORITE PAPER.

The Detroit Tribune.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1876

THE DETROIT TRIBUNE will enter upon its new year, 1876, prepared in its appointments and long equipped to meet all of the large and growing requirements of the changed business conditions, by which, for the first time, a Democratic House of Representatives is to act with the Senate and the Executive Administration, and the approach of another Presidential canvass, will give fresh interest to many public questions, which will be looked at by the people with intelligent candor. The coming year will also bring the centennial anniversary of many historical events in our country, and, in connection with the Centennial Exhibition, will direct to the whole country the attention and observation of many interesting subjects upon the history, prospects and characteristics of the nation. It desires to be, and to be acknowledged as, the leading journal of the Northwest, and will spare no pains or expense to secure the latest, most reliable and most complete news of every section, and especially of the Northwest. THE DETROIT TRIBUNE stands for the best interests of knowledge in all the arts, and for the universal advancement of mankind. The Democratic party, long and justly excluded from power, has regained their success in 1874, will make a more persistent and determined struggle to get control of the National Government. Realizing the success of this organization would be a national calamity, THE TRIBUNE will not hesitate to oppose its every measure and policy, as it deems it right. Recognizing Republican principles, such as it believes best for the country, and looking upon the administration of President Grant as the best that the people ability to have secured, it will defend and support it, and will not hesitate to point out and seek to have removed, whatever in the past has been found to be wrong. In such a course, and in its efforts to discuss such general information as the operations of politics as well lead to a sound and righteous Republican triumph, with wisdom and ability to enter upon the second century of the life of the republic.

In the News department of THE TRIBUNE will exist itself freely, as heretofore, to accurate, graphic, faithful and spirited correspondence for the purpose of giving the latest and best of the news in the most attractive and readable form. Its compilation of Money is necessarily gathered by its own paid correspondents, far and near, in variety, and excels that furnished by any other Detroit paper.

Its Agricultural department embraces matters of interest that cannot be excelled by articles prepared with the greatest labor and care, so that they can be implicitly relied on.

Its stories, poetry and miscellany are all of the with the greatest care, and from the best and most reliable sources, the aim being to make THE TRIBUNE a most welcome, enjoyable and useful visitor in every home.

In short we aim to make

as money, long experience, practical skill, a pride in the paper, and untiring zeal can possibly produce. THE TRIBUNE will continue to outstrip all rivals in the completeness and excellence of its various features, we intend there shall be no doubt about.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, it should be borne in mind is the LARGEST weekly paper in the State, being EIGHT COLUMNS larger than any of the other Detroit papers. Intrinsically very much more reading matter. It is carefully edited, and altogether, has no equal anywhere in the West in point of real value and general attractiveness in all its departments. It will be kept fully up to its previous standard, which has given it an immensely wider circulation throughout Michigan than any other paper published within or without our borders. There is probably not a school district in the State where THE TRIBUNE is not to be found.

The price of THE TRIBUNE in its various editions is as follows: Daily, $10.00 per year, including postage; $5.00 for six months; 2.50 for three months. Tri-Weekly, $6 per year, including postage; $2 50 for six months; $1 for three months. Weekly, $2 per year for single subscriptions; $1 80 in clubs of five; $1 75 in clubs of ten; $1 50 in clubs of twenty—all these prices include postage, which we have to pay. A large and elegant sized Michigan (lower peninsula), all ready to hang upon the wall, is also given to every subscriber to THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE for 50 cents extra. This offer is made as an inducement to new subscribers, and for renewals, as the price to anyone not a subscriber is $1 50. Address all letters to Terrible Effects of the Great Dynamite Explosion.

THE Bremen correspondent of the London Times, writing on Dec. 22, says:

A gentleman who visited the scene of the disaster a few hours after the event said it looked more terrible than a field of battle. Hospital attendants and pastrymen, aided by volunteers from all classes of the population, had, indeed, removed those remnants of humanity in which the vital spark was not wholly extinct, but what remained was a human shambles. As in an anatomical dissecting room, all the individual limbs of the human body might be seen lying about separately in ghastly isolation. Here a head was stuck on a railing, while a hand was seen pointing at empty space from a window-sill. More horrible, perhaps, than the lacerated limbs, whose outward shape was sufficiently preserved to admit of recognition, were the formless masses of flesh strewn in every direction, mixed up with arms and feet. On the final spot were boots and shoes, coats and shawls, and countless splinters of human wood. Where the wagon stood there was a hole in the ground, very unpolished, and leaving a hole over six feet deep and seven feet wide. Horses, vehicle, driver and persons were blown into atoms, without a trace of them left. On the brink of the opening which marked the spot where they disappeared an intimate was seen, empty, and sticking for the time post in the garden upon the glacis. The explosion came itself, when in eruption at night furnishes a magnificent pyrotechnic display. A wide surface of the heavens at the highest up as if by the fires of the judgment day, while from the crates there is a constant spouting up of streams of fire and huge masses of red, burning lava. Amid the darkness the scene is both majestic and sublime, and cannot fail to inspire one with awe at the wonderful works of nature.

The center is three miles in diameter, and surrounded by a ridge of lava, sand and earth about 1,000 feet in height. A walk of half a mile leads on to a recent overflow of lava, over which one plods for a couple of miles. The entire bed of lava is almost as black as charcoal. It is broken up into every imaginable form, and is as brittle as glass, so that it is constantly breaking beneath one's feet, and often cracks like ice in a lake when one is walking over it. In some places the lava is formed into coils like tarred rope, in others it looks like sticks of molasses candy suddenly turned into every conceivable figure; elsewhere it appears like long cables drawn out till they snapped into 10,000 pieces, and other like it in color and glossy as a seal's back. One walks over it with a constant tremor, as well he may, for often as the foot was raised the piece of lava stepped on would fall and leave a deep hole, showing into some molten cave or subterranean cavern.

There are two of these, Kilauea-mui and Halemomuue, within a space of half a mile long and half that width, and sunk from fifty to 300 feet below the general surface of the cooled lava. Kilauea-mui is 1,500 feet long and 900 feet wide; and its sides are ridges of packed lava, constantly bursting at white heat. All around its edges are jets of boiling red lava, constantly playing, and rising to the sixty feet. Sometimes they form into fountainous fire, and six of them at a time have been known to form a perfect circle of fire unbroken for forty minutes. Sitting on the border of this awful and sublime pit, persons are wholly killed by fumes of the lava beneath, undermined by the fire, breaking off and falling with a splash into the boiling lava, which again would transform it into liquid form. The streams of lava are constantly spouting into the air, and thus this mighty molten mass has been seething and boiling for time known ago, and may continue its fiery work for unknown ages yet to come.

The weight of these lakes are fringed with what appear to be natural furnaces or ovens, with small apertures on the surface, and a floor of boiling lava beneath. In some places there are large cakes of lava glowing with fire between, and in other places the lava is so lacks to destroy the soles on people's shoes and scorch their feet. Near this is also a bank of sulphur covering a couple of acres, and full of seams whence issue steam, making the fumes not only almost suffocating, but so fierce that one has to close his eyes and hasten across the spot, or they would probably no one would ever care to enter this literal hell more than once.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, who recently visited Kilauea, gives some advice to those who may visit the locality in future. Never go on a passing another State at the Volcano House we paid our bill—five dollars per day each person—for entertainment (not an civilization)—and took our departure for Waiohinu, forty miles distant. Our trip had around the edge of the crater and three miles from the house we found ourselves near the burning lakes, where we had a long, full view of them in all their activity; and I would advise all visitors, instead of making the perilous descent into the crater at the risk of their lives, to take a ride or walk out on the point nay night, where they can see much better and more safely than from the house. Two or three days after the event terrible discoveries were confirmed, made in houses and court-yards, in stables and river boats. A man would go up to the loft to fetch fuel and find a leg flung across the coals. A woman feeding poultry in the farm-house was shocked to behold a finger fought for by the feathery tribe. In the harbor bloody trunks were and tell with the stream for several days, presenting a revolting aspect, and causing the authorities to have the nice dredged. The most harrowing spectacle was that presented in the dead-house of the church yard before the first burial of the remains. Heads without trunks, trunks without heads, legs without feet and arms without hands were displayed in hideous rows for identification. Pierce by pierce the ghastly collection grew, until the whole of the long church was filled with the ghastly relics, and the thought beggars description for any one attempting to put these visits to torn members continued. For days afterwards were taken of heads and hands. For two days pursuit of the endeavorous army were gradually removed by relatives bringing full sized coffins for a single limb, and finding it carefully sown up in linen before consigning it to its last inclosure. Then the grave hid its own. Meanwhile some thirty persons still wholly killed by the explosion were living in an improvised hospital not far from the scene, in many cases mutilated and suffering agonies that there was little occasion for utterance. Only the sufferer cases admitted of the services of the healing art. If there was anything calculated to render the effects of the catastrophe more appalling it was that the infliction is confined to comparatively few families. Whole families having gone to see their relatives off, whole families were killed and wounded. A terrible instance is that of Mr. Lange, who with all his nearest and dearest accompanied his eldest son to the boat to wish him God-speed on his departure for the West Indies. The father, the elder and younger son, one son-in-law, the brother of another son-in-law, and a cousin are dead. The mother has had her arm broken. One of the daughters has just lost her right hand; another daughter is wounded in the face, inside and the third daughter wounded in the arm; while the sister of one of the sons-in-law had her left hand blown off. That, while the whose brother is dead is terribly lacerated in the abdomen. This is the worst case, but others might be cited hardly less melancholy. The explosion was heard for many miles around. It is affirmed that a line, nothing more, penetrated to the very environs of Hamburg.

The Decay of Glaciers.

FROM a comprehensible article in Harper's by John Muir, upon the above subject, we extract the following:

A glacier is a current of ice derived from snow. Complete glaciers of the first order take their rise on the mountains, and descend into the sea, just as all complete rivers of the first order do. In North Greenland the snow supply and general climatic conditions are such that its glaciers pour directly into the ocean, and so, undoubtedly did those of the Pacific slope during the flush times of the glacial epoch, but now the world is so warm and the snow crop so nearly nearly all the glaciers left alive have melted to mere hints of their former selves. The Lyell Glacier is now less than a mile long; yet, setting out from its frontal moraine, we may trace its former course on grooved and polished surfaces, and by immense cairns and moraines, a distance of more than forty miles.

The glaciers of Switzerland are in a like decaying condition as compared with their former grandeur, so also are those of Norway, Asia and South America. They have come to resemble the short rivers of the eastern slope of the Sierra that flow out into the hot plains and are dried up. According to the Schlagintweit brothers the glaciers of Switzerland melt at an average elevation above the level of the sea of 7,443 feet. The glacier of Brienlenalt melts at less than 1,000 feet; that of the Aar at about 6,000. The Rhone glacier, in which the flanges takes its rise, does not, according to Dapt Hodgson, descend below 12,914 feet. The average elevation at which the glaciers of other places the lords are lacks to destroy the soles on people's shoes and scorch their feet. Near this is also a bank of sulphur covering a couple of acres, and full of seams whence issue steam, making the fumes not only almost suffocating, but so fierce that one has to close his eyes and hasten across the spot, or they would probably no one would ever care to enter this literal hell more than once.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

FEATHER-BED.—Take two cupfuls of sugar, three eggs, one-half cupful of butter, two-thirds cupful of sweet milk, three cupfuls of flour, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder, flavor with lemon. This is excellent.

TO CLEAN TURNIPS.—Wash quite clean, do not peel or cut or soak. Boil them whole in their "jackets." When, by trying them with a fork, they are found quite tender, take them up, peel them, press moderately and mash with butter.

CREAM TARTARS.—Soak two thirds of a cup of tapioca in warm water till soft; boil a quart of milk with the yolk of three eggs, well beaten, and two-thirds of a cup of sugar. Boil till thick, stirring carefully, but the whites of the eggs with the two-thirds of a cup of white sugar, flavor and pour on top of the pudding. Set in the oven to brown.

TO CLEAN GLASS.—This method of cleaning fine glass gives it a great brilliancy. Take the powdered indigo, dip into it a moistened cloth, and rub over the glass with it; and then wipe it off with a perfectly dry cloth. As a substitute for this, the sifted ashes spoken of by a rag dipped in spirits will answer just as well. Spanish white is apt to make the glass rough and injure its—American Agriculturist.

TEARS save those—Ivy pulls and tools are dangerous to man and beast. After every fall of snow the roads should be looked to, and all dangerous ice and stone-bound, and the paths shoveled out or packed down in a similar manner. A heavy plank drawn along the paths will clear off or pack down the snow. Cow ashes or sand are the best material to scatter upon roads and paths when they become smooth and slippery.

TO MAKE BOOTS DURABLE.—The durability of soles of boots and shoes may be greatly increased by rubbing them with gum copal varnish, which also has the effect, on making them water-proof. Four or five cents should be given, allowing each coat of varnish to dry before the succeeding one is applied. Soles thus treated possess twice the usual durability, and generally outlast the uppers. Soles of leather uppers of boots or shoes may be rendered soft and water-proof by rubbing into them while warm, before the fire, a mixture composed of four ounces of hogs lard and one ounce of rosin.—Ohio Farmer.

FRENCH BOOTS.—Two quarts of sifted flour, a lump of lard about the size of an egg, one a little larger of butter, stir into the flour the same as in making pastry. Then with sufficient cold water to make stiff, preferably milk and water, to mix; add a little salt, half teacupful of homemade yeast or three tablespoonfuls of baker's yeast. Mix the sponge as for bread, and let rise. In the morning shape them with the hand and board, and let them rise, but not to be disturbed with either if the oven is sufficiently heated. Good bread is made in the same way with proportionally smaller quantity of lard and butter.

New Year Thoughts.

At the beginning of a new year every farmer ought to review the past year's operations and endeavor to draw from his experience such conclusions which will be of great value to him in the coming year's labors. We believe one of the most serious causes of success, among farmers, is a want of close calculation and comparison of results. Very rarely are accounts kept with debts, crops or stock, and, whether failure or success attends any particular venture, causes that led to them are not sought for. The same thing is repeated each year, the same errors blundered into, with invariably the same results. A careful record of successes and failures of the year, with observation of causes, probable or certain, would help very much in the plans for the year to come. The time is most favorable for this retrospection and the forming and perfecting plans for the future. It is not only the time when the year's work is across; close of a season's work on the farm. Every crop has been garnered and sold, perhaps, even to the hog crop itself, and no other matters are required to the cession of comparative leisure, also, giving plenty of time for this most important work. Shipping Masters' list convention will neglect this cleaning up year-end business. Scientific Method, "a mass of the people, within for them, and be ours." Business Men's Exchange, "Business." Its advertisements are earnest expressions of the great restraints, its enthusiasm is multiplied by the unparalleled success of its remedies in curing disease. The people will have it, and nothing else, because, as the New York Tribune says, "Its reputation is based on its solid merits, its efficacious efforts and attainments." Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, Medical Discovery is perhaps more largely sold than any other kind of liver medicine, and also as a cough, cold and lung remedy than any other in the world. His Favorite Prescription is not recommended as a "cure-all," as is so often done by compounders of worthless nostrums, but for all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women it is the best remedy ever devised, a specific that it now enjoys great popularity and immense sales. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, "scarcely larger than mustard seed," as they are described, are safe and reliable as a cathartic that they are rapidly taking the place of the big pills which gripe and sicken so much in use; while his compound Extract of Smart-Weed is a reliable remedy for Colds, Cramps, Summer-complaint, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera and Cholera Morbus, and also as a liniment. Of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche little need be said, as their sales are so large as the greatest specifics for Catarrh and "cold in the head" ever given to the public. And believe this large measure of success, Dr. Pierce owes chiefly to the fact that he remembers as an author as he has as a physician. His "Common Sense Medical Adviser," a book of about 900 pages, which he sells at the unparalleled low price of $1.50, has already been sold to the extent of exhausting two editions amounting to fifty thousand copies. The secret of Dr. Pierce's success, as well as that of the great revivalists, and seems of other Americans who by their genius have acted step by step from obscurity to affluence and distinction, consists in treating the people with confidence, sympathy, candor and honesty. No man, who hopes to attain either wealth or distinction, can afford to deal unfairly with the world or be indifferent to the wants and best interests of humanity.

Keeping Apples.

As the crop is short and prices have ruled high, it is all the more important to preserve apples in the best condition. The most desirable way is to keep them in a uniform temperature, just above freezing. The home cellar is the farmer's fruit room in winter and if properly managed answers the purpose perfectly. But there is a great deal of carelessness in guarding against extreme cold, and the thermometer often ranges near the freezing point. Several degrees of cold are more injurious in finding out the old ones, or there is more lying on the subject of old age, than formerly. The Duke census for New York this year shows 199 people in that State who are over 100 years old, which is nineteen more than were found ten years ago. Brooklyn has several of the oldest, including the very oldest, Sarah Hicks, aged 114. Another of the white singers were fourteen born, twelve were colored, and two Indians.

A CENTENARIAN named Wall, residing at Phœnixville, has several very fine canary birds which he has given much attention to. One of the birds he has taught to sing "Home, Sweet Home," clearly and distinctly. His mode of instruction is as follows. He placed the canary in a room where it could not hear the singing of other birds, and suspended its cage from the ceiling so that the bird would see its performance only itself and hear the music. He placed a musical box that was regulated to play no other tune but "Home, Sweet Home." Hearing no other sounds but this, and believing the music proceeded from the bird it saw in the mirror, the young canary soon began to catch the notes, and finally accomplished what its owner had been laboring to attain, that of singing the song perfectly. Mr. Wall has been offered and refused $20 for the yellow-throated songster.—Reading (Pa.) Eagle.

"A Substantial Meal."

A FEW days ago a gentleman was applied to by a tramp for employment. The applicant and his outfit downwithing, from editing a newspaper to reckoning a grandmother. He was also an accomplished stenographer, and he exhibited letters from various distinguished persons recommending him to the good offices of all admirers of transcendent genius. Like most geniuses he was needy. His paper collar, a world too large, had been so often pulled forward that pencils refused longer to do duty, and the cuffs inkling his left ear. His pants were badly frayed at the bottoms and his shoes could only be pulled shoes by the farthest stretch of courtesy. His coat sleeves were much too short, and his face bore marks of actual want.

"Surely," thought the gentleman, "this man is in need," and while he accepted his work of cooking, washing, scrubbing, etc., with all the cheerfulness and zeal with which he was endowed in these duties in her early married life.

American Genius, Moody and Sankey.

The great revivalists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, who have been so much delighted with their eloquence and enthusiasm, are not exciting more interest than is resulting from among the common people, their singing especially. Mr. Sankey, and the use of the whole people, and hardly has the secret of his success been found out. He is a popular tenor singer and is familiar with the songs and tunes that please the people, without being vulgar. In this fact we see a reason for the grand success of the meetings, which many Americans have attended. Sankey's Gospel Hymns, and other song-editions is that great establishment, located at Bigelow & Main's Express in the "World's Dispensary," as most appropriate name for the mammoth depot, with its wilderness of manufactured remedies for the cure of the ills that flesh is heir to, from all parts of the globe, and at which a corps of distinguished chemists and physicians, under the general direction of Dr Pierce, are constantly adding to the list of its remedies as well as to the efficacy of his remedies in curing disease. The people will have it, and nothing else, because, as the New York Tribune says, "Its reputation is based on its solid merits, its efficacious efforts and attainments." Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, Medical Discovery is perhaps more largely sold than any other kind of liver medicine, and also as a cough, cold and lung remedy than any other in the world. This Hannon—Senator Perry has sounded the key-note for the Pine River appropriation campaign at Washington. On the 7th he introduced a resolution in the Senate calling for a recent report from the Secretary of War, on the amount necessary to improve the harbor at Charlevoix. The report will probably be the one recently submitted to his superior by Colonel Mansfield, through the instrumentality of Representative Hubbell. Of the nature of this report we have no knowledge, but a large reduction in former estimates constitutes a prominent feature of it. Thus the fruit of the efforts put forth in this direction last summer is budding out and developing. We hope it may still develop into the fullest realization of our hopes. We are certainly approximating nearer the desired end as each succeeding year rolls around. This fact cheers us.

The centennial, besides being beneficial as a sort of recreation for the business crazy American, is predicted by some to be a financial blessing. It is thought that the enormous drain of gold and silver from this country, caused by so many Americans traveling and living in Europe, will be stopped and turned in this direction for one year. This, they say, will make financial matters much easier.

As Brightman was boasting to a Yankee that they had a look in the British museum which was once owned by Cicero. "Oh, that ain't nothin'," retorted the Yankee, "in the museum at Boston they've got the lead pencil Ole Noah used to check off the animals that went into the ark."

The "Confederates" in Congress—that's what the Chicago Times calls them—have, it is alleged, resolved, as a sine qua non, to couple with the proposed $1,500,000 appropriation for the National Centennial Jollification, the release of Jeff Davis from his political disabilities. That is to say, they will defeat the Centennial appropriation if Jeff is not amnestied, pardoned and restored to all the rights, privileges and immunities of American citizenship. The Southern Democrats, who rule the House, are bound to show their hands—and the sooner, the better.

At the annual sale of pews in Plymouth Church at Brooklyn, Tuesday night, the amount received for rentals premiums was $63,640, against $70,210 last year. The highest price paid was $600, in advance of $100 over the highest price last year. The auction was preceded by a little speech by Mr. Beecher, in which he reminded his hearers that they had not been fed on "theology, dry, hard to take and hard to carry." Well, we should think so! The last pew sold brought $5, which indicates that the church is quite large enough for the accommodation of all who desire to worship in it.

"Those fires seem very familiar," said an old Union soldier, as he sat in the gallery of the House gazing upon the Democratic side. "I think I have seen many of these countenances before, and if I am not mistaken, at that time they were facing the little end of a gun."

Nearly all the officers, from top to bottom, elected by the Ohio Legislature served in the Union army and most of them were wounded in the service. The Legislature is Republican. In the popular branch of Congress, no Union soldier, or friend of Union soldiers, was elected, while a great many of the former were turned out to make room for Confederate soldiers. The House is largely Democratic.

When Mr Post offered his resolution for preferring Union soldiers to Confederate soldiers, "other things being equal," in bestowing official emoluments, Mr. Morrison, the Democratic leader, ruled that it be referred to a committee, when Mr Post declined, and Mr Morrison promptly replied: "Then your resolution will be voted down," and it was done. A very convenient arrangement that, under which one man is able to speak for the House.

The Confederate party has recently blistered slavery in Alabama. An existing law of the State provides that Negroes convicted of minor offenses may be sold to the highest bidder and made to work out their penalty.

JOSEPH LAPAGE has been tried at Concord, N. H., for the murder of Napoleon Joule Langmaid, and on the 13th was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged on the 19th of January, 1877.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

On the 10th petitions were presented in the Senate and referred—of Rufus Wesson of Utah, asking for the repeal of the Anti-Polygamy law of 1862 and the Poland bill, and that Utah be admitted as a State into the Union; of citizens of Ohio, asking for a repeal of the Resumption act and a return to the old system; and also for the enactment of a law to provide for the retirement of legal-tender United States notes; of citizens of Ingalls order United States notes, etc. Resolutions were unanimously adopted declaring that the thanks of the Vice President-elect have been tendered to secure the office of President pro tem. of the Senate, and that that office be held at the pleasure of the Senate. Several bills and memorials were presented and referred, and a large number of bills were introduced in the House, among which was one by Mr. Wood, of New York, to repeal, in part, the act of Jan. 19, 1875, providing for the resumption of specie payments, and to facilitate the resumption of specie payments without contraction of a currency. The motion of Mr. Randall that the rules were suspended in order to consider the Amnesty bill, and the previous question was demanded and seconded 136 to 6—after which a running debate on the question of discussing the bill was indulged in, the Republican members claiming that the previous question carried any amendment thereto or continuous session, which would not be granted by that side of the House, and on the right of amendment was conceded by the Democratic members. The bill was finally—yeas 178, nays 97—put on its requisite two-thirds to the majority. Mr. Blaine then moved to reconsider this vote, and proceeded to speak at considerable length in behalf of his amendment to exclude Jefferson Davis from the provisions of the bill, and proscribing an oath to be taken by parties availing themselves of the privileges of the bill. He was followed by Messrs. Cox and Kelley in reply, who spoke in favor of universal amnesty, after which Mr. Hill, of Georgia, obtained the floor and the debate went over.

On the 11th bills were introduced in the Senate for the formation of a State Constitution in New Mexico and the admission of such State into the Union; to establish a branch mint at Denver, Colorado; a lengthy speech in reply to the remarks of Mr. Blaine on the Amnesty bill, after which the Senate—after in connection with the death of ex-President Johnson—was adjourned; and several eulogies upon the life and services of the deceased were delivered.

On the 12th a bill was introduced in the Senate to place all enlisted troops who enlisted in the service as equal footing with other soldiers as to bounties and pensions. A resolution was introduced for the appointment of a committee to examine the books of the Treasury Department. The resolution declaring the office of President pro tempore of the Senate to be vacant by reason of the Senate was, after discussion, adopted—ayes 38, nays 15. After the introduction of several bills and resolutions in the House—among them one to authorize National Banks to prepare for specie payments, and one to refund the cotton tax—consideration of the Amnesty Bill was resumed, and Mr. Garfield spoke in support of Mr. Blaine's substitute and in reply to Mr. Hill's speech of the previous day.

On the 13th, in the Senate, petitions were presented signed by over 2,000 citizens of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri, asking for an appropriation of $1,000 for the improvement of the upper Missouri River. The Judiciary committee was instructed to inquire and report whether the act of March 1, 1792, making provision for succession to the Presidency in the event of vacancy, is not defective, and if so, to what extent. Mr. Davis spoke on his resolution calling for an investigation of the books of the Treasury Department, and was answered by Mr. Boutwell, who stated that the investigation was opposed only by Mr. Davis and appeared to be a personal matter. Adjourned to the 17th. Several resolutions of inquiry and investigation were adopted in the House, Mr. Blaine made his closing speech on his pending amendment, which was finally lost, after which Mr. Banks offered an amendment providing that any person laboring under political disabilities should have those removed on application to an oath of loyalty in the form prescribed, which amendment was ruled out of order. Mr. Banks advocating it, followed by Messrs. Tarbox and Storm in favor of universal amnesty. Mr. Randall then closed the debate on the question, when the original bill, with Mr. Banks' amendment—Mr. Blaine's not having been admitted—was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Interior of a Buddhist Nunnery.

AS no more an opportunity might not leave occurred again of seeing the interior of a Chinese or Buddhist nunnery, I asked the Abbess to show me through the temple and explain the regulations of the order. She assented, and frankly told me all about the institution and its government, which she is by no means so strict as that of the Romish convents. The candidates are not admitted into full membership until they attain the age of sixteen. Prior to this, and from the commencement of their secular life, they assume the garments similar to the sisterhood. The chief approach to distinction between the novices and those in full orders is that the heads of the latter are wholly shaven, while the former have only the front part of the crown shaven. The younger nuns have plaited queues, flowing down behind them. The nuns mostly had large feet, clumsy shoes, loose stockings and garters, tall trousers, short jackets and sleeves, with bald pates and skull-caps, precisely as the priests have. But the priestesses have smoother countenances, softer looks, sweeter voices and were more tidy. When the young woman has bared or shaved her head—a sign of making religious vows very different from that of "taking the veil," adopted in the nunneries of Europe—she is trusted to live a life of devotion and mortification. She must eat and drink sparingly, and her diet must consist of vegetables only. Strong meats and drinks are to be avoided as poison. The business and cares of this world are not to occupy her attention. She has retired from it, and must be tilting herself for eternal emancipation. Nothing should occupy her thoughts or engage her affections but the service of the temple in the precincts of which she lives. Daily exercises are to be conducted by her; the furniture of the small sanctuary that forms a part of the convent must be looked after and kept clean and orderly; those women or men who come to worship at the altars, and seek guidance and comfort, must be cared for and pastured. When there is no more for her to do, she must go to bed and be visited, and all who have played themselves under her special direction and spiritual instruction have a large claim upon her regard. That she may live the life of seclusion and self-denial she must sow perpetual matrimony; the thought of marriage should never enter her head, and the society of men must be shunned. As far as I could see these rigid rules were not seriously complied with, and there appeared no great amount of devotion in their religious exercises, especially among the novices There are books and beads in abundance, many volumes printed in large text on fine paper. For these they had a profound respect. The reading with which the pages and sewing of the books were turned off at such religious exercises was amusing. Both the young and the old nuns seemed equally expert at their recitations, but there was nothing of a devotional spirit about them, their demeanor was anything but decent. I was shocked to see the levity of the junior nuns in paying religious homage to the goddess Kwan-yin; they were as merry and tricky, as flirting and frolicsome, as any party of girls out for a sweetheart holiday of one of their schoolmates.—Mossman's Mandarin's Daughter.

Rag-Hunting in India.

WHEN the company is not large and the animals are in good condition, a party of four men will race together for the sport. It being a universal rule that the honor belongs to the man who can draw the first blood." The result depends on a variety of considerations The boar, driven out of one patch, will endeavor to gain another cover. If the friendly shelter be within a mile off there is no reason to expect that the animal will turn and charge, unless it be one of an unusually savage nature. If the second cover is two or three miles from the first, and the beast be one of average courage and ferocity, a charge may be expected as soon as breath is scant and weight begins to tell! We rarely ever met with a boar thirty inches in height that would not charge at the first quarter or half mile the very best Arab that was ever bought for the Indian market. But after awhile, speed and staking prevail, and as the sportsman comes to closer quarters it is impossible to say whether he or the animal be first to "rush behind" or whether the animal, like Macaulay's British lion at Agincourt, will turn to bay in wrath and will come down on the enemy's hunter with bristles erect, and as stiff as a ramrod, foaming jaws and a series of short and defiant grunts. The maxim, approved by all hog-hunters of every degree, is that the charge must be met, and notwanted. To stand, spear in hand, while the boar comes at you, is to expose yourself and your Arab to be upset, cut and slashed and ruined for life. A great deal now depends on correctness of aim and steadiness of touch. A true spear will puts his horse into a smart canter, bends slightly forward over its right shoulder, and plants the spear as near the point as possible, before the make of his adversary can rip up the forearm or the body. With a jerk to withdraw the instinct of the horse respond, he wheels rapidly round to the left, withdrawing his spear if the wound be slight, and leaving it sticking if deep, while the enraged animal is just too late even to gnaw the horse's hocks. Then, from a determined boar, there may ensue a serious and close attack. The wounded hog sets its back to a bush and rushes out upon one man after another. As many as three spears have been seen lodged in the flanks or ribs, quivering as the hog staggers away under them, until at last it finds a more favorable cover, or else it settles the business. In a good country, not only level but smooth, the whole affair—the hard, the pursuit, the charges and the thrusting—be all over in less than ten minutes. But the course of trying hunting is not always more smooth than that of fox-hunting. Sometimes the ground is clay, trodden by cattle unevenly when wet, and then hardened into the consistency of iron. Sometimes the boar skirts the edge of a marsh or swims a deep river, or takes to a line of gardens and orchards, in the midst of which he buried the carcass of the bengal peasant whom the hunter gets bewildered among shady and narrow paths crossing each other at right angles, and is confused by shouts from together or be suddenly charged by an enraged trader where there is no room for him to practice the hard manœuvre. Sometimes the boar starts the first thing from the commencement of the search till, they assume the gait peculiar to the sisterhood. The chief apparent distinction between the novices and those in full orders is that the heads of the latter are wholly shaven, while the former have only the front part of the crown shaven. The younger nuns have plaited queues, flowing down behind them. The nuns mostly had large feet, clumsy shoes, loose stockings and garters, tall trousers, short jackets and sleeves, with bald pates and skull-caps, precisely as the priests have. THE EDITORS CENTENNIAL.

The waves of time have lashed their spray
Against our rocking pebble world
One hundred times since that great day
That Freedom's banner was unfurl'd
Above the lands where heroes stood,
Inspired to die or Freedom's call
While their rang out soul sound and sweet
From grand old Independence Hall!

Brave editorials with hearts as true
They dared throw off their cloak of guiling yokes
"Why, Uncle Jake" how do you do
This morning? How are all the folks?
Glad to shake hands with you again"—and with
The shout of sound and laughter
Defend the right.—"No, Mr. Bonble,
Your proposal is not going to do"

They met, no doubt, not least the kind
To blessings from a foreign shore,
Under my "Uncle Sam" Liberty
Or those back ties once and when the dome of Wash'ington rolled" Columbia's skies
Were veiled and lofty mountains shook
At a quarrel, an self-defense
Your last sentence packed book."

And fields were dyed with many a drop
Of crimson of the bravest blood that was
Or ever shed! You'll find a further study
This side the second dear ladies'
Hull Rose, when the battle was
And united day with clouded pearls
Of No! haven't we enough
Tell them to stop upon their annals

They fought in "Uncle Sam's" like the name of True
And dear to the British Lion's ear
That was to-day? Yes! bright signs
Of Peace, once the olive branch
The peace? Whose possible dog to tear!
Hell out! Now let the Devil' scrape,
For we are all in the Centennial
The death of—Pandora's box!

A SPELLING MATCH.

THE lamps were just lighted in the Town Hall, each the reflector doing its best to emulate the dignified glitter of silver. The audience were assembling by twos and threes. Behind the green curtain which hid the platform a dozen boys and as many girls stood beside a table on which were placed the prizes for which they were about to compete in the great spelling-match—an event which had consumed Industry's energies to the center, had set the sewing circles in a flutter, and caused Webster's and Worcester's dictionaries to take temporary rank with the young people of Hillsdale as the most enthralling books in the English language.

Ray saw that she admired it intensely, and a half wish crossed his mind that she might win it—only a half one, for to the successful success becomes indispensable, and the desire to be first was very strong upon the unlit-up young fellow. Presently an avalanche of camphrates, followed by a procession of squeaking boots, announced the arrival of the "Committee of Reference." The boys and girls ranged themselves in parallel rows. Mr. Asbe, Principal of the academy, appeared with a formidable manuscript roll in his hand.

The curtain rose: the audience clapped. "Now, my young friends, I beg that you will speak as distinctly as possible," said Mr. Asbe. With that he committed his roll, and gave out the first word, "hippopotamus," and the battle commenced.

There was to tell what stands gave over
As sweep the fight over the orthographical plain, how an elderly youth of some sixty summers, with a preconceived theory as to the word "Indian," which he pronounced thus: "I-an-a-n," was the first victim, and a tiny girl of six the second; how "aneurism" slew its thousands, "phlebotomy" its tens of thousands; how May Martin left a victim to "curass," and Augustus Brown was borne off protesting that "squeteh that" had but one t in it. Traps and pitfalls abounded. Slowly the ranks thinned; the vanquished, finding what comfort they could in numbers, lined the wings, applauding and jeering their more successful fellow-competitors.

At last Mary Alger was left the only girl, opposed to three boys, of whom Ray was one. Five minutes' breathing-space, and though neither of the four would ever miss. The excitement became intense.

"I like g-l-d-i-n-g," spelled Mr. John Beach.

"Wrong," said Mr. Asbe, and John, crestfallen, crunked his way off the stage. Each of the three conquerors must feel sure of a prize. The question was, which prize?

Mr Asbe had exhausted his roll and produced from his pocket a dead-letter volume, full of wisest if spectrumse would call "croppers." Also Uncle Bigerly tipped up. The word "demonize" proved too much for him. Only Ray and Mary were left. The audience held its breath as first one and then the other triumphantly surmounted words which stumped fatal by difficult to less instructed ears.

It is at such crises as these that manly nerves win the day. Out of the corners of his eye Ray saw the flush rise and deepen on Mary's cheeks and her fingers clasp and gather each other. She was getting flustered; in another moment she would blunder. Suddenly a generous impulse took possession of him. She cared so very much for this plaster thing! Why not for once give in and be content to conquer secondly? It all passed through his mind in a flash and his resolution was taken.

"Pentateuch," gave out Mr. Asbe.

To the astounded astonishment of the audience Ray Pelham rose and spelled the word thus "P-e-n-t-a-t-e-u-k-e."

There was a roar of laughter, in which every one joined except the bewildered Mary. Her wonderment lasted but a moment, passed by delightful surprise. Mr. Asbe placed the "Union Refugees" in her arms; the boys and girls crowded round her.

"Mary, Mary," said Ray, heartily.

"Are you, Ray? That's good of you," she said. Her face showed such overpowering excitement, her eyes sparkled becomingly, several old ladies went home declaring that "Mary Alger was a nice girl," and Ray was most a handsome girl. She looked as pretty as a pink with those tigers in her belt. But the boys were not to be done and stuck up, for she wasn't so long—ing, after all." Ray was of their opinion, only he didn't agree with them as to the why and wherefore.

That evening of the spelling match, dated xchange in Mary's life. She did not become a blue, but she became much kinder and life easier and the world pleasanter from that time on. Were the boys and girls more friendly? Ray was the sun about more than it used to? Were lessons easier, and was her own shy stiffness more unmanageable? It was in that Ray, with his trunk face and good natured ways, seemed to turn up at her side everywhere, doing things for her, explaining, offering, bringing her, as it were, ex rapport with herself and with other people? I do not know; Mary could not have explained, but something must have been at the bottom of this altered world with its pleasant chain of sequences; and certain it is that in the course of a few months she and Ray grew to be great friends.

No more spelling matches were held in Hinchinbrook after that night. The next evening did not die, and Ray had to bear frequent references to his blunder. Boys who could not spell a dozen words or so were temporarily dissatisfied with something said or done, were apt to soothe their souls by dragging the word "Pentateuch" into the conversation. Many a boy here these small shafts philosophically. His friends felt them more keenly.

How did you come to make that plaguy mistake?" indignantly demanded Harry Platt one day, dragging him off somewhere to be fitted for a new jacket. The lie never lot they were mowing. "It rites me like anything. There's that lit the wahpy-snappy Jack Bonnery always plays with. Pentateuch, indeed. How did it happen, Ray? You're the best speller of us all."

"Easy enough to make a mistake," replied Ray, whipping a mullein from its stalk with a blow of his scythe.

"Pshaw! not a mistake, like that. Why, little Peter Potter knows better. And you——"

"Ha! if you give me your word not to tell, I'll say something——"

"Well, I do. What is it?"

"I did know better. I'm not such a fool that I can't spell 'Pentateuch.' I missed on purpose that night. There's reason!—what!"

But Harry demanded in vain. Ray explained no further. After a while they walked back to the hay-field.

Their conversation had an auditor—an unsuspected one. Mary Alger was perched in the tree under which the boys stood as they talked. It was an oak-tree, low, broad, easily climbed, and boasting ample fun feet or so from the ground, a gnarled bough whose crotch made a comfortable seat. For years it had been. Mary's habit to come to this spot and there study her lessons, read or dream; but it was a habit which she carefully concealed. She was far too big to climb trees now, said her mother. Mary admitted it; still she climb

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

The Cloud Like a Man's Hand—Cuban Carpet-Baggers

The Working in the Diane Novel Robbery—The "Crucible" Empty.

The Worm of the Still The Sun-Compelling Art

[Special Correspondence of the Sentinel.]

New York, Jan 21, 1876.

To the Editor of SENTINEL:—

The little cloud of the size of a man's hand, which some of the sharper political eyes saw in the horizon months ago, begins to be discernible to ordinary vision. The logic of events in the Cuban matter brings conviction that something is in the wind, but just what it is, or whether the gathering storm will burst is pass as by some but a few sensation journalists venture to assert. A private, or I might almost say official, letter, sent by our Government to feel the pulse of Europe on the subject of intervention, together will the sudden overhauling of the Navy and the sending of coal and stores to South European ports can hardly be without meaning, though the probabilities would seem to be against Spain's venturing to take up a third war, and thus work a power like our own. Still, it is not impossible that the crafty Spaniards, feeling their inability to subjugate their distant and determined province, yet unwilling to acknowledge the fact, now seek a more honorable egress from their dilemma, by precipitating a conflict between both countries that look out generously and to overpowering force. Should that programme be carried out, it requires a prophet to foretell the destiny of Cuba. A carpet bag governor, half a dozen carpet bag congressmen, one or two hundred patriotic postmasters, a few municipal rings for Havana, with a good constitutions New York offices to encourage the religious element in such primaries, and personally defend the purity of ballot and bench, and, presto! the thing is accomplished; our glorious republican institutions are firmly rooted in her priest-ridden, blood drenched soil. Super dative drop off our best cigars; the immoral and degrading bull fight disappears before the refining influence of dragon poker fights, and the American Eagle stretches his protecting wing over the island generally.

It is certainly an enchanting prospect, but nevertheless let us hope that it is a distant one, that the war talk is all a scare, and that the opening year of our second century may show no stain of blood that is not shed in defense of our rights, our liberties, of our national existence.

But to return to local affairs. New York workingmen are like their class the world over, more turbulent and troublesome when they can't get their own price for work than when they can't get work at all. There are thousands here utterly unemployed, but we hear far less from them than from some noisy crowd of strikers who could have steady work if they pleased, but who prefer an loaf and to half a one. Just now it is the ship-caulkers, who to the number of three or four thousand are standing round with their hands in their pockets, sulking and threatening over the reduction of their wages to $3.50 per day—an income which seems nothing less than princely to make an honest fellow who walks the cold streets looking vainly for an odd job in best back the wolf from his door. Such a strike is worse than foolish. In this case at least, if it cannot be successful, and meanwhile work is going to neighboring towns, so that when these gentlemen are starved into accepting market rates, some of their number are sure to find themselves out in the cold.

A large meeting was held in the Cooper Union a few nights since, to consider the condition of the unemployed laboring class, and discuss plans for improving the same. Mr. Peter Cooper presided, and numerous speeches were made, but it became evident to the course of proceedings that the eccentric philanthropy of the meeting was mainly to cover for advocating a greenback currency with interconvertible bonds, the adoption of which scheme, as the speakers urged, would end the trials of the laborer and mechanic by giving them plenty to do at high wages. Just what proportion of the audience were continued by that line of reasoning is not reported.

Another of those romantic robberies and restitutions which are occasionally recorded, but less frequent here. About one week ago the messenger of a Wall street firm was mysteriously relieved of $12,000 in bonds which he was taking to the bank. The theft stopped payment and set all the detective machinery in motion to discover the thief. Failing to get any clew, they advertised a reward of $4,000 and immediately received an anonymous note appointing a place of meeting and designating a number of the firm to call at for trades. He went to the spot indicated, accompanied by the partners, but found no one but a boy, who coolly handed him a note saying that the broker must be alone and appended to another number. Instructions for comparing to follow at a distance, and found himself the liberties given only to receive a second note saying that nothing could be done till those following were dismissed, and making a third meet this time on a prominent corner of Broadway. Finding that his gentle manly correspondent was not to be imposed upon, the broker then hurried to the appointed point and there under a gas lamp in the crowded thoroughfare, with perhaps half a dozen persons within call, the object glass was fixed to come out the $2,000 into the hands of a well dressed youth, who coolly handed him the bonds and disappeared. The whole transaction wears the thickest and most exasperating description.

Ex Mayor Oakey Hall proved to be not a star, but a meteor in the democratic sky. After those brief weeks of forcing upon the public gaze he has told his friend farewell to the footlights and retires to his family and his wine. Connected as was this recent and unsuccessful venture with some disadvantage to his reputation, he is by no means a stranger to the public, and it was generally believed that he would not be long in finding a publisher and some other field of labor. Accordingly he was visited by a reporter of the Herald, who found him in his office, busily engaged in writing his memoirs. Mr. Hall very well, commanding his charge of purpose and welcoming him back to his profession. With the withdrawal of "The Crucible," the Park Theatre, which was the scene of this histrionic experiment, has changed its character somewhat, the management assuming for the future a "Ladies Bond" entertainment of a comedy, vaudeville and farce. The new regime was inaugurated with "Major Watting-ton de Boots." by Mr. Lionel Brough, in irresistible comedian, for years the favorite actor of Chicago, that wicked town, whose public men are just now writhing in the iron coils of the sworn enemy.

For the rest, unfavorable results in stock quotations and plays continue unaltered still holding the boards, and mighty filling the different houses.

The next best thing to witnessing these actual stage performances, is to behold and admire the elegant and wonderful scenic representations of the principal scenes and characters in current plays, which are always displayed by Mora, the leading photographer. The extent to which he has developed and perfected the art in his every marvelous, and his portraits in pastel effects of light and shade, retain an artistic charm which it must be acknowledged is far in advance of some of the portraiture purporting to be. A visit to his elegant gallery on Broadway, filled with the highest expressions of our compelling artistocracy, poets, journalists, musical and dramatic fame, and the elite of the city—is one of the pleasantest features of the sightseer's programme. One of the most interesting objects there exhibited is a large album containing besides numerous celebrities pictures of about 150 of the most prominent persons in New York society, taken in the costumes worn at the grand fancy dress ball which Agost Belmont gave at Delmonico's at an expense of $30,000. For this album Mora has refused the large sum of two thousand dollars.

PLAIN and COLLORED WORK

Promptly and Neatly Done

Slander.

BY H. G. S.

From the New York Tribune.

Who has not heard of those dreadful scourges to mankind, the plague and Asiatic cholera? Both springs into existance in far-off Eastern Asia and to long westward with rapid and gigantic strides, carrying death to every home to its merciless track.

In our own fair land, who is there that has not witnessed the ravages of Ring Alcohol, on hillside and plain, in the village or the purely metholountry, and in every place where there is a four corners or a post-office, carrying in his train misery, vice, perdition and death?

There is a thing abroad all over this land as one way more terrible than either of these, carrying death as surely and intensely as both combined.

It is a fiend to which the rich fiend of hell is an angel in comparison.

It is a pestilence, walking in darkness and daylight spreading a contagion for and near which no man can avoid or withstand.

It is an assassin whose keen pointed dagger pierces with deadly certainty the life out of its victim.

It lets fly the poisoned arrow whose wound is mortable. It's sting is more fatal than the bite of the deadly cobra.

Would you know the name of this fell fiend?

Go with me to yonder cemetery and ask yon pale mourner as she kneels low over the marble slab that marks the last resting place of the dear one she weeps thus, and she will tell you I was not a dear one who is sleeping there, the victim of the slanderer. Ask the leaders as he is planting upon the same mound the myrtle and wild rose emblems of love and peace, why he is so nearly crazed with grief, and he will tell you, my sister lies there, that which next was purer, more better. She died of a broken heart, because in my madness I believed the voice of a seeming friend who whispered tales of slander in my ear.

Our answer is plain. Let us take heed while we may, and if we see the slanderer coming afar off, shun him as we would the worst enemy man could possibly have.

Third Term.

The Manistee Times gives the following expression to its views on Mr Hubbell's vote on the Springer resolution

We do not understand that Mr Hubbell has done anything that he need be ashamed of in this respect.

1st. It was not a legitimate work of the House to handle such a resolution. The members are sent there to legislate not to express opinions on political candidates, nor to force members to commit themselves against any person for president. If they had desired to prohibit any man from holding the office more than two terms they should have introduced their work as other enactments are introduced.

2d. Mr Hubbell simply would not be forced by Democratic copital makers to express himself as opposed to President Grant's holding the office of President a third time. This does not signify hostility to Grant or in favor of the third term policy. It simply implies that he did not intend to be committed against it or against the support of President Grant should anything arise that might render his nomination desirable.

The large amount of Copperhead and rebel sentiment now in the House and its boldness in taking steps toward the regaining of power and position—the movement on foot to obtain pay for damage to the south during the war, and other well-known indications all point all loyal man that there may be necessity for nomination of some such man. Whether he is, is material, provided he is of the right mettle.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native Roots found in the Lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease that flesh is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

MICHIGAN'S FAVORITE PAPER.

The Detroit Tribune.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1876

THE TRIBUNE, however, will endeavor upon the new year to maintain its reputation as a thoroughly reliable newspaper, and to make it more than ever a welcome visitor to the family circle. It will contain all the news, foreign, national, and local, that is worth knowing, and will present it in a manner to interest and please. Its correspondence will be full and reliable, and its editorial columns will discuss the questions of the day in a fearless, independent spirit, but with fairness and moderation. Its market reports will be full and accurate, and its literary department will be conducted with especial care to meet the wants of the family circle. In politics, THE TRIBUNE will be found in the future, as in the past, the consistent champion of the principles of the Republican party, and will support its candidates with zeal and energy, but it will not be the servile organ of any man or clique. It will not support bad men for office because they are Republicans, nor oppose good men because they are not. It will not be the organ of any faction, but will endeavor to represent the whole party, and to secure the success of the principles for which it was organized, and which it has so successfully maintained. It will not be the servile tool of any man, but will be the friend of all men who are honest and capable, and the enemy of all who are dishonest and incapable, whether they be Republicans or Democrats. It will not be the organ of Monopoly, nor will it be the enemy of capital, but will endeavor to be just to both capital and labor, and to secure the rights of each.

The Agricultural Department will only print such matter as experience has shown to be reliable, and will endeavor to make it more than ever a welcome visitor to intelligent farmers, and to their families. Its Horticultural Department will be made more interesting and valuable than ever before. Its Market Reports will be full and accurate, and its Literary Department will be conducted with especial care to meet the wants of the family circle. In every home in which it is read it will be found a welcome visitor.

As Perfect a Newspaper

as money, hard experience, practical skill, a desire to use power, and untiring work can produce, is the aim of the publishers of THE TRIBUNE. Its columns will contain all the news of the world, in the compactest and most convenient form, and its various departments will be made as full as space will allow.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE. It should be borne in mind that the LARGEST weekly paper in the world, being EIGHT COLUMNS larger than any of the other Detroit papers, that fact alone gives very much more reading matter. It is especially clean and complete, and has no equal anywhere in the West, in point of true value and general attractiveness in all its departments. It will be kept fully up to its present standard, which has given it an immensely wider circulation throughout Western New and other paper published either within or without our borders. There is probably not a school district in the State where THE TRIBUNE is not to be found.

The price of THE TRIBUNE in its various editions is as follows: Daily, $10.00 per year, including postage; $5.00 for six months; $2.50 for three months. DAILY, $8.00 per year, including postage; $2.00 for six months; $1.00 for three months. WEEKLY, $2 per year for single subscriptions; $1 each in clubs of five; $1.75 in clubs of ten; $1.50 in clubs of twenty—all these prices including postage, which we hereby pay. A large and elegant map of Michigan (cover pattern) 36, 48 inches in size, upon the wall, or also given to every subscriber to THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE for 10 cents extra. This offer is made as an inducement to new subscribers and to those wishing to get up clubs. Address all letters to

A Run for Life Over the Plains.

THE absolute freedom of illimitable space, the exhilaration of the sparkling sunlight and the excitement of the opposing wind, which was strong enough to oblige Arthur to exert a certain degree of physical strength to overcome it, so wrought upon him that in a few moments he had thrown off the mysterious spell which he fancied the Hound Trinity appeared to have cast over his spirits and had placed a material distance between himself and its gloomy towers. The landscape, which had hitherto seemed to summons and uninspiring, now became suggestive in the low dome-shaped hills beyond, that were huddled together like full-blown cauliflowers raised by the fiery breath of some long-dead volcano, he fancied he was the origin of the Mission nomenclature. In the long sweep of the level plain he recognized the calm, successful life that had led to expression in the pastoral poetry of the people. In the fierce, curious wind that blew over it he was in communion and perpetual that all manner, except a narrow fringe of dwarfed willows skirting the line of an extinct water-course was hidden in shallowed cañons and the low-sad slopes of the hills he recognized something of kindred restless love and no longer wondered at the barrenness of the life that was turned toward the invader. "I dare say," he muttered to himself, "somewhere in the keyword of these people's natures may exist a blindness akin to that we shall never know. I wonder if the dons has not"—but here he stopped, angry, self, if the truth must be told, a little frightened at the presidency with which Donna Dolores cherished herself into his abstract philosophy and sentiment.

Possibly something else caused him for the moment to dismiss her from his mind. During his rapid walk he had noticed as an accidental, and by no means an essential, feature of the bleak landscape the cast-iron of crawling, purposeless cattle. An entirely new and distinct impression was now forming itself in his consciousness—namely, that they no longer were purposeless, vagrant and wandering, but were actually obeying a certain definite law of attraction, and were moving deliberately toward an equally definite object. And that object was himself!

Look where he would, before, behind, on either side—north, east, south, west—on the bleak hillsides, on the slope of the fields, across the dried-up arroyo, there were the same converging lines of slowly moving objects bound to a single focus—himself! Although walking briskly and with a certain definiteness of purpose, he was apparently merely unchanging, fixed and isolated point in the new and strange scene. Everything that rose above the level, bottom level was now moving slow in unison, but converging, inexorably, toward one common center—himself. Alone and unsupported, he was the helpless, unconscious nucleus of a slowly gathering force, almost human in its immensity and power.

At first the idea was amusing and grotesque. Then it became patronizing. Then it became something for practical consideration. And then—but not with the quick and unerring instincts of a powerful will he checked down the next sentence before it had time to fasten upon or paralyze his strength. He stopped and turned. The ranche of Don Blessed Trinity was gone! Had it suddenly sunk in the earth, or had he diverged from his path? Neither, he had simply walked over the little elevation in the plain beside the arroyo and corral, and had already left the rancho two miles behind him.

It was not the only surprise that came upon him suddenly, like a blow between the eyes. The same mysterious attraction and been operating in his rear, and when he turned to retrace his steps toward the Mission he faced the staring eyes of the bulls, not fifty yards away. As he faced them the nearest turned, the next rank followed their example, the next the next, until in the distance the whole cast the movement repeated with military precision and sequence. With a quick relief, that he put aside as quickly, lest he should be sense of fear, he quickened his pace until the nearest bull abead broke into a gentle trot, which was soon announced line by line to the cattle beyond, until the whole herd before him undulated like a vast, many-colored flag—a continuous series of waves and pace the corral until the blinding and impenetrable cloud of dust, raised by the pitching hoofs of the moving mass beforehim, caused him to stop. A dull reverberation of the plain—a sound that at first might have been attributed to a passing earthquake—now became so distinct that he could count the hoofs as they struck the ground. Not twenty yards behind him came the advance wall of another rank, the simultaneous sea of tossing horns and undulating backs that had been slowly following his retreat! He had forgotten that he was surrounded. The nearest were now so close upon him that he could observe them separately. They were neither large, powerful, vindictive, nor ferocious. On the contrary, they were thin, wasted, lanigered, anxious beasts—commonly ally equipped and gotten up, the better to wrestle with a six months' drought, occasional famine and the incessant buffeting of the wind—wild and untamable, but their staring eyes and nervous limbs expressed only wonder and curiosity. And when no run toward them with a shout they turned, as had the others, file by file and rank by rank, and in a moment were, like the others, in full retreat. Rather, let me say, retreated as the others had retreated, for, when he faced about again to retrace his steps toward the Mission, he treated the many backbones and interlocking horns of those he had driven, only a few moments ago, before him. They had recalled themselves of his diversion with the rear guard to return.

With the rapidity of a quick intellect and swift perceptions Arthur saw at once the resistless logic and utter hopelessness of his situation. The inevitable culmination of all this was only a question of time—and a very brief period. Would it be sufficient to enable him to reach the cañon? No! Could he regain the corral? Perhaps. Between it and himself already were a thousand cattle. Would they continue to retreat as he advanced? Possibly. But would he be overtaken meanwhile by those in the rear? He mustered the question himself by drawing from his waistcoat pocket his only weapon, a small "Derringer," and taking aim at the foremost bull. The distant effect in the animal's shoulder, and he fell upon his knees. As Arthur had expected his nearer comrades, stopped and sniffed at their helpless companion. But, as Arthur had not expected, the eager crowd pressing behind overbore them and their astonished brother, and in another instant the unfortunate animal was prostrate and his rite beaten out by the trampling hoofs of the relentless, blind and eager crowd that followed. With a terrible intuition that it was a foreshadowing of his own fate Arthur turned his face toward the cortal and ran for his very life!

As he ran he was conscious that the act precipitated the inevitable catastrophe—but he could think of nothing better. As he ran he felt from the slushing of the earth beneath his feet that the net had some moments which broke into active motion behind him. As he ran he noticed that the cattle before him re treated with something of his own precipitation. But as he ran he thought of nothing but the awful fate that was following him, and the thought spurred him on to almost frantic effort. Arther was quite incessible to any of these weaknesses which mankind regard as physical cowardice. In the defense of what he believed to be an individual truth, in the interest of his pride or his self-love, or in a moment of passion, he would have faced death with unbroken fortitude and calmness. But to be the victim of an accident, to be the lamenta ble victim of a logical succession of chances, without motive or purpose; to be sacrificed for nothing—without proving or disproving anything; to be conceded to death by idiotic beasts, who lied not even the instincts of passion or revenge to justify them; to die the death of a coward—all these were to him unspeakable—a death that had a ghastly indistinctness in its method, a death that would leave the body a shapeless, indistinguishable, unrecognizable clod, which affection could not idealize nor friendship reverence—all this brought a terror with it that was overpowering, exhilarating, and that the fastidious, proud, intellectual being fleeing from it might have been the most cheerful companion in the world to run or dance. And superadded to it was a preposterous thought that, for its very absurdity, was the more terrible—that something that he dared not contemplate! And it was then that his strength and fleetness began to fail. His venous began to run; his breath, which had been at first quick and regular, became labored, stertorous, and finally flagged

TRAMS.—H. L. Miller wants teams to haul wood.

We keep everything you want. Fox, Rose & Buttars.

EXTENSION.—We believe all the towns in this county have extended the time 30 days for the collection of taxes. It is the first time Norwood has ever extended the period regularly observed.

VESSEL TRANSFER.—Capt. D. S. Way has exchanged his house and lot on Bridge Street, with Capt. Ben. Campbell for his half interest in the Schooner W. J. Smith. Capt. Way will sail her next season.

FROM the Tribune we learn that the south dock at Iceland, owned by N. Pickard, was carried away by a recent blow, and about 60 feet of the north dock, owned by the Iron Company, taken off.

LEAP YEAR.—Amid the clash and glorious clatter of the ushering in of the Centennial year, the important fact seems to have been overlooken that this is also leap year. Ladies of Charlevoix, assert your rights.

CHARLEY ELDRIDGE, a "sport," who was well known to persons of that ilk in this city and to the officers, was found dead in his bed at the Mason House, at Clam Lake, on the 25th. It is reported that Eldredge had been gambling and carousing. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict of death caused by the excessive use of intoxicating liquors.

—Grand Rapids Eagle.

FOR ARKANSAS.—County Surveyor Miller, and his daughter, Mrs. John Walker, left yesterday for Arkansas. Mrs Walker goes to join her husband, and Mr. Miller goes to look up a new home in that State.

ANOTHER NEW VESSEL.—Capt. Ben. Campbell and Sam'l M. See, Esq., of this village, have the model out for a schooner eighty feet in length, which they intend to build this winter. A full description will be given hereafter.

FOSS has returned and is making everything lively in Emmet county. The Petoskey Democrat says: "It would seem that some strange fatality accompanies Mr. Ford, as no sooner does he return than our once peaceful county is filled with law suits, in which he figures in very important parts."

THE ENTERTAINMENT.—We were unable to attend the Young Folk's Dramatic Club entertainment on Saturday evening, but we are informed by competent critics who were present that the Club did itself and its manager justice. The attendance was not large owing to the severity of the weather.

New Plaid Dress goods just received at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

LITTLE TRAVERSE bay has frozen over sufficiently strong to support general travel. Stages from Cheboygan are loaded with passengers on their way "outside." Crossing at the Straits is reported difficult; too much ice to go through the water, and not enough to go over it

JOHN GORDON died at Grand Rapids on the 25th. He was one of the earliest pioneers of Grand Rapids, was born at Detroit July 4th, 1824, of French parentage, and was brought up to hardships and interesting experiences of Indian trading. He accumulated a handsome property.

THE Grand Rapids Democrat announces the death of Samuel M. Garfield at his in Grand Rapids township on Sunday last. He had been sick for more than a year. Indeed, it was with great difficulty that he attended to his duties in the House of Representatives last winter.

ENLARGED.—Friend Rose has enlarged the Petoskey Democrat to a seven column paper. This makes it a nice-looking sheet and gives him more room for advertising. Rose makes a tasty and readable paper, and we hope the Petoskey people will demonstrate their appreciation by extending their patronage and encouragement.

JEWELRY.—J. S. Coffman, watch-maker and Jeweler of Petoskey, desires to inform the citizens of Charlevoix and vicinity, that he will be in Charlevoix on or about the 10th of February, when he will promptly and properly repair all watches, clocks, and jewelry entrusted to his care. All work warranted, adjusting fine watches a specialty.

WE will receive yard wide "French Cambrics" in plaids, stripes and figures at 15 cts per yard this week. Fox, Rose & Buttars.

THE SENTINEL.—It is not frequent that we permit ourself to say anything commendatory of our paper, and we be pardoned for saying that Charlevoix county can boast of a paper which is fully up to and even in advance of the present development of our resources. We can point to counties of far greater wealth which have papers far behind ours. When we consider that the total population of the county does not exceed 3,000, can we not congratulate ourselves on possessing a quarto weekly journal furnishing in each issue over twenty-seven columns of interesting reading matter, embracing a full report of all local transactions, and the latest news from all parts of the world. We say it not boastingly, but nevertheless it is truth, that the SENTINEL is the right arm of the county. It faithfully and correctly presents to the outside world the good features and advantages of this locality, and labors incessantly for the interests of the people of the county. It is the mouthpiece of the people, and is so recognized by them, and by those to whom the people address their petitions. The whole county is its field of labor, and every locality therein will receive its attention.

Our Next Congressman.

Already some of the papers in the southern portion of this District are naming their candidates for the next Congressional nomination. We presume there are numerous aspirants for the position in all parts of the District, and the campaign for the nomination will be a vigorous one.

THE SENTINEL desires to be considered a radical "third term organ" as regards the Congressional candidature in the Ninth District. Our reasons are of the best. Hon. Jay A. Hubbell, our present Congressman, has established for himself a record of sterling political integrity, and devotion to the interests of his constituents in all their minute details. His course during his incumbency of the position has been marked by an admirable consistency, an uprightness and dignity, which point him out as as an able and honest legislator.

After an experience of nearly four years as Representative of this District, he has attained to a thorough understanding of its local and general wants, as well as the political sentiments and desires of its population.

It will be a departure from no rule or precedent, but, rather, the observance of a good rule of common sense, to return him again another term. The best interests of the District can be so served, notwithstanding what Congressional aspirants and their organs may say to the contrary.

We are confident that the local and general interests of the District can not be placed in as good hands for another term as in those of Hon. J. A. Hubbell, and with this belief we deem it our duty to announce him as our candidate, subject to the ratification of the Congressional Convention, and we think we speak the sentiments of the people of this part of the District.

ELECTRO PLATING.—Elsewhere will be seen the advertisement of the Flint City Electro Plating works, O. W. Smith, proprietor. We can vouch for the entire reliability of the establishment, and assure our friends that it is an excellent opportunity to make new silver ware and gold jewelry out of old worn out material. Work left at this office will be forwarded promptly.

THE amount of logs under contract on the Muskegon river, and branches, this winter, is 302,100,000 feet, of which 116,000,000 are on the main river, and 50,000,000 of which are below Big Rapids, the rest being distributed on the other branches of the river. W. S. Garrish is at present the largest contactor on that river, having afloat and sold 22,000,000 feet last winter, and sold 26,000,000 feet this winter

THE GOOD TEMPLARS are doing a good work, and large numbers are weekly added to their membership. At their last meeting the officers for the ensuing quarter were elected, all the present incumbents being continued in their stations. The installation ceremonies will be performed next Friday evening. We sincerely hope that this band of temperance workers may unite in doing good in more ways than one. Many opportunities for good works present themselves on all sides.

THE Traverse Bay Eagle throws several weak innendoes in our direction, aimed with an eye schooled in the very tactics he says we have practiced in our unimportant course in regard to Representative Hubbell's vote on the third term resolution. To enter into a discussion of the postoffice question, or an attempt to prove our honesty in the premises, would be a silly waste of time. But we think the remarks come with very poor grace from the Eagle. We were never enticed from the path of political rectitude by visions of land offices, etc., and our skirts are clear from neck-reform movements, made with an eye single to the glory of Smith. The Eagle is a first class school-boy journal, as well, and should never aspire to anything above amateur pretensions. Editorial dignity is as foreign to its columns as editorial courtesy is to its editor. The billingsgate of any loafer, or the puerile essays of any ten-year-old are received, because there are not brains enough around the institution to furnish anything better. If any person wishes to inform the public that his neighbor wears a pair of stockings two weeks, or turns his paper collar, the Eagle is his organ.

RAILROAD MATTERS.—The Elk Rapids railroad project is strengthening, and the Railroad Company announce that the scheme only needs the proper encouragement from the people of Elk Rapids to make it a certainty. It is to be a narrow gauge track, and the bodies of cars are to be transferred from one set of trucks to another by means of an immense crane, to be located at the junction. A rumor is current that the J. L. & S. R. R. Co have their eye upon Cheboygan nor Burt's Lake as a terminus for their road. The idea seems to have sprung from a desire to compete with the G. R. & I Company in the canup bleeting travel—the Cheboygan internal navigation improvement bringing Burt's Lake in a direct line of travel with Petoskey.

HANNON.—On the 24th the chair laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War enclosing a report from Col. Mansfield in answer to the Senate resolution in regard to the improvement of the harbor at Charlevoix. Senator Ferry has gone at this matter just as he said he would—in earnest. We have the same pledges from Senator Christiancy and Representative Hubbell, and evidence every day appears that they are faithfully carrying them out. If they do not succeed it will be because a Democratic House defeats their efforts. It was the Democratic party to which our people transferred their reliance last spring, remember; now let us see if that unnatural political revolution was all in vain. We hope not, but if it was or was not, the attendant result in neither case will disprove our statement that a mistake was made; nor will any circumstance change our belief that the county will be more largely Republican next fall than ever.

OVER coats and clothing at Panic prices at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

Antrim and Charlevoix Counties' Sunday School Association.

The Sunday School Association met in the Norwood school house last Tuesday evening, and continued its sessions until Thursday night. The first meeting was occupied with the opening sermon, by Rev. W. L. Tilden, from 1 Cor. 1.: 30. The business was transacted Wednesday morning. The following Executive Committee was elected: Rev. C. N. Coulter, President; Rev. W. L. Tilden, Secretary; Arch. Buttars, Esq., Rev. W. R. Stinchcomb, Rev. J. B. Hall.

The selection of the place for the next convention was referred to the Ex-Committee. It is to begin on the last Tuesday in June, Schools that would like to have it with them, will please send their invitations to Rev. W. L. Tilden, at Charlevoix, before the last of April.

The remaining sessions were devoted mainly to the discussion of practical themes. The utmost harmony prevailed, there being on most questions just enough difference of opinion to animate the speakers. There was some keen debating on the responsive reading of Scripture, on the admission of religious novels into S. S. Libraries, and on the use of prizes. Messrs. Coulter, Tilden, Hunsberger, Kinney, Richardson, Wilkinson, Green, Morgan, and several others participated in the discussions. The question drawer was a prominent feature. Sixteen questions on various topics were handed in and answered, besides a good many orally addressed to the speakers on the subjects under consideration. Reports were made on the difficulties and success of the schools represented. Part of the time was devoted to prayer, and other acts of worship. The singing, under the lead of Wm. Harris, Esq., passed off well.

The last session, Thursday evening, was a children's meeting, at which five short addresses were made. A collection was taken, amounting to $2.20 (most of the Charlevoix people had gone home). As there was a deficit of $3.10, the treasury contains one cent. This is not enough to buy stationery, pay the postage on the secretary's correspondence, and print programmes. Every S. S. is requested to take a collection at some time during the year, and forward it to the secretary.

A vote of thanks was passed for the hospitality which the people of Norwood have shown, as they always do.

ACCORDING to a Vienna special of the 20th Ljubobeschitsch had resigned the leadership of the Herzegovinian insurgents. On account of the concentration of Turkish troops on the Montenegrin frontier the Prince of Montenegro has called a council of Senators and military officers, which resolved that if such concentration resulted in blockading Montenegro on that side it should be considered a casus belli, and the Prince should summon all Monte negrins able to bear arms and march into Herzegovina to aid the insurgents.

A DISPATCH of the 20th says the Grand Jurors of Caddo Parish, Louisiana, had presented to the Circuit Court their report, in which they declare that the Returning Board was illegally appointed; that the Governor had no authority to remove Supervisor Casey, and that the Governor had no authority to appoint Commissioners of Election. TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL:

Now that Cincinnati has been duly spoken as the Presidential cross roads of the Republican party, it finds itself better than ever able to discuss and speculate as to what extras will be made and which of the noble steeds will come out ahead. A good many of the parties interested insist that those extras should be requested contests who have never run before, but whether or not this clique will succeed in cancelling one old warhorse, who is a terror to the backers of all his rivals, is very uncertain. However, the winner's prize in the contest is only a nomination after all, and to make that worth anything the most win nowhere in a race where no one will walk over the course for when the knowing ones in New York are good it's useless to bet unless the very stars are of the Democratic kidney to be now here "umpire quarters in the White House.

To come down to plain English, the universal eagerness to know the result of the Republican Convention is only equalled by the difficulty of making even a respectable guess at it. The quicksilver character of nominating conventions is so well recognized that even papers of the Herald and Sun description, whose usually extremely dogmatic and positive on doubtful topics, are cheered to treat very gingerly about the contines of the subject, and to avoid prophecies they might look awkward next June. The only certain thing about the whole matter seems to be that private wishes will find out just exactly as any one else.

The city seems to be suffering from an epidemic of crime of all grades, which, during the last few months, has kept the police court and the coroner pressed with business, and so crowded the state prison at Sing Sing that the warden writes that few more prisoners can be received. Beside the multitude of minor offences, burglary, defalcations, burglaries, and the like, the number of which is, of course, largely attributable to hard times, the average of murders for the Winter, so far, must be two or three per week, and yet there is not a single murderer out for retrial. Besides

French Cemeteries.

THE French do not bury in single graves like their English brethren. They buy or hire a plot of ground four or five or nine or ten feet square, if you are rich, and three dig one grave deep enough for all the family. Over this is built a little house in stone—a shepherd in the sides of which are written the names of the dead below, down under the marble slab in the pavement. You are the father of the family and die first, but its age. Very good." A plan for Monsieur in the first compartment, there," says the undertaker to the servants of the dead. The stone slab is raised. You arrive, surrounded by the family, you enter the chapel, and presently—beyond out of sight. A small stone is erected above you, and space enough is then left for one, two or as many others of the family as may be desired to be buried there along with you. Inside the chapel or the out is placed a little altar, and this, especially amongst the lower classes, it is a sentiment of pride to furbish up and adorn, and often an object of envy and excessive rivalry. I have noticed often a new fashion of candlesticks or vases appear in one chapel of a genteel quarter of the cemetery, and immediately have found it reproduced in every sepulchre in the neighborhood. Almost the whole of these are kept in order by their owners. You will see a woman first sweep her little house and clean it and adjust her ornaments, then fall upon her knees on the threshold, and, beating down each her repeated, inaudible or silent prayers for the dead. The very poor hire a grave for five years, often for one year, or two, or three (according to their affection for the deceased and their estimation of the mutability of their bodies), and this house-sweeping, their bones are dug up and flung into a common ditch at the back of the cemetery, and the grave put in order against the arrival of new lodgers. Otherwise you would have been unable to accommodate all the applicants for admission within the very limited piece of ground assigned for the interring by Napoleon I. in 1804. As for the interior, I believe they are huddled into ditches dug in a certain part of the poor quarters of the burial grounds. Père Lachaise, the design of M. Haussmann, Prefect of the Seine, who undertook all the improvements achieved during the last reign, is the most stuccoed immense burial-ground, a magnificent campo santo, a bait hour by the railway out of Paris. It was laid out and surveyed for this purpose M. Haussmann had decided upon a spot to the southward which would be unsuspected, and here the sculptors, the painters and decorators were in fine spirits when the war came, and the overthrow of the Government, and all Haussmann was obliged to go into hiding and finally turn up outside Paris. The present Government, in exceeding prudence and timidity, has ordered all little cemeteries out of the city. But its a mean project and they will not make these genteel enough to tempt the dead out of Paris I fear. In Paris's choice, the only grave inclosed with a railing, English fashion, and without any monument, is that of the great Marshal Ney. So many are the kind pilgrims to this spot that the bit of stone under the gate is worn in a hollow. The most beautifully decorated tomb—chapel, what you will—in the interior is that of the late Count Morny, who was private and public counselor to His Majesty the Emperor for years, and when he died in 1865, his life contented said the vigor of the Empire died with him. It is possible—I can't say. Once, about 1857, this gentleman, a notable patron of the arts, like the Emperor, ordered a painting of M. Edouard Frere for his picture gallery. A year or so come upon the town then, had had many people praising him, was evidently to be one of the grand painters of the future. When the Duke de Morny waited upon him Frere begged him to select his subject. It was to be a Swiss scene, said the gentleman, say of four figures, and he offered 10,000 francs for it. So Frere began the work, and, soon finishing the painting, dispatched it to the Duke. But if it had expanded under the magic hand of the painter; there were a half dozen figures —eight or nine. This was not approved. You conceive that the Duke fancied he knew more of the rules of art than an upstart just out of the study-room, and he begged M. Frere to take away home the painting and to rectify his mistakes of taste. Upon this, however, the painter remembered his picture, walked to the Seine, and turning about said: "Mousieg-neur, I have painted my picture as I like it. You do not like it. Very good. You shall not have it. So adieu, and good morning." And with this disappeared out the door. Nor would he sell the picture to M. de Morny, even when he offered double the sum of the first offer. M. Frere has just concluded an arrangement he made years ago with a New York house not to sell any picture in Europe. He is delighted with his freedom. And he has completed and sold Italy all this moment a superb performance, called "The Grave Before Mont." Tis a rustic scene. It represents a little family at table; all the dishes before them, the spoon ready stuck in the porridge; and passing, glad homage paying in sweet contest, to the call down a blessing on their meat.—Letter of a Parisian, in Boston Post.

The Miniature "Tiger-King."

THE attempts made by adventurers to amuse and interest the public are often more ingenious than agreeable, and it would be well if all those depending upon cruelty and oppression for success failed as signally as the intended performance in Paris of the miniature Tiger-King. A respectable work-person was returning home one afternoon, says a French journal, when a very little child, apparently a prey to the wildest terror, clutched her gown, crying "Take me away, take me away!" Looking at the little lady more closely she perceived that he was covered with deep scratches. "How did you get those?" she inquired. "From the cats," he exclaimed, "the tour cats!" An idle looking man now advanced and chastised the child, but as the same moment a lock-smith came forward and, rudely addressing him, said, "You have got a fine piece of work out of me, but you shall make use of it no longer," and an altercation ensued, during which a little knot of interested persons, guided by the locksmith, made their way to the house whence the little boy had escaped. It then appeared that the little child was being trained to act the part of a dwarf in a miniature circus, in which he was to imitate Hebé, the lion-tamer, on a very small scale, by exercising his sway over a number of cats, stained to resemble tigers. To this end the unhappy little fellow was daily shut into a cage supplied by the locksmith to his cruel guardian, with four cats, whom he was threatened with dire submission, but who, after the manner of their kind, when unable to escape, meekly bore him no pleasure whatever. While at this was being explained to the spectators the inventor of the miniature circus managed to disappear.—London Pall Mall Gazette.

Shipwrecking as a Trade.

EXACTLY as there is nothing new under the sun, so, we may take it for granted, there is nothing uncommon or rare, and where Thomassen attempted and failed other men have attempted and have succeeded. It is very likely that, as has been suggested in more than one quarter, the City of Boston was destroyed in some manner of the same manner. But we seldom that an Atlantic liner leaves absolutely no trace of her loss, and of the City of Boston and a load of a plank has ever been picked up. Anyway it is tolerably certain that of the many vessels that are written if as lost with all hands not a few are destroyed by foul means. Anyone who has been to sea only for a short cruise must know how very unlikely it is that a good ship properly handled should founder in mid-ocean. A vessel of 2,000 tons, if her cargo is rightly stowed, ought to be able, and for all practical purposes may be assumed to be able, to ride out a hurricane. Of course ships may, and often do, go ashore, but that is the fault or, it may be, misfortune of the Captain, not the fault of the ship. When, however, we find as we do, that quite an ordinary vessels go down lastly at sea as are wrecked on the shore it is impossible not to suggest a theory. Of course a missing vessel may have been run down by another or may have come in collision with an iceberg or with a mass of floating wreck. So, too, for all that we shall ever know, she may have been taken by pirates and practically there is almost as much chance of one catastrophe as of the other. Icebergs and floating wreckage are more common objects at sea than are pirates, but, in known cases, they have seldom destroyed a vessel without leaving abundant traces of her fate. So afterward picked up.—London Examiner.

Japanese Oddities.

THE Japanese turkeys do not quite come up to those of their kind in this country. Their flesh does not become so succulent and tender upon a diet of rice as upon that of Indian corn. The Japanese have an odd name for this bird, signifying the "seven-colored fare," from the changing hues of their feathers in the sun. In the same way their name for the crab, the animal that walks "seven ways." Speaking of crabs, we may remark in passing that the Cooties say almost chestnuts and sweet-potatoes. These poor fellows, who perform the most tiresome and prolonged tasks for a mere pittance, who "carry the burden and the heat of the day" in the fullest sense of the expression, have a hearty appreciation of good food. Toiling as they do for daily wages that would not purchase the food of a child in our country, cheap food is the necessity of their lives. Hence it is that they feed largely upon sweet-potatoes, the cheapest food of all edibles in Japan. Chestnuts, which are known as "nine-mile nuts," while not excessively dear, are generally beyond the means of the Coolies. But they delight in fancy fruit, which nevertheless are almost as good as chestnuts, so they accordingly dub the potato "eight-mile and a half good," which makes it seem to feel a mile short of the chestnut. A man who lives on chestnuts can go nine Japanese miles (about twenty-two and one-half English miles) in a day, while he who eats sweet-potatoes can go eight and one-half miles (twenty-one and one-quarter English miles), hence the names. Notwithstanding what seems to us to be the weak and insufficient diet of the Japanese laboring men their endurance and strength are truly wonderful. I have ridden sixty miles between sun and sun in a jinrikisha drawn by two Coolies, and the day after that I went about forty miles more with the same two men. At the end of the first days journey they did not seem to be very fatigued. Immediately after stopping at a tea-house for the night they took a bath in water so hot that I could not have washed my hands in it, and after comfortably parboiling themselves got out, took a heavy meal of rice and dried fish, and then sat up almost all the night gambling and drinking sake. On the coldest days, and even when there is snow on the ground, you can see these fellows on the street with no clothing save a thin cotton shirt, a pair of pants of the same material reaching to the knees, and straw sandals. Nor do they seem to be particularly cold, although a foreigner would consider their costume barely sufficient for a warm summer day.—Yeddo Cor. Cleveland Herald.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

THE New York Central & Hudson River Railroad managers prohibit the shipment of potatoes in barrel or bag.

BY the suspension of 199 collieries in Pennsylvania, recently, about 25,000 persons were thrown out of employment.

HORSE wire should be softened before being used for rivets. To soften, heat and allow to cool, or dip in water.—Trade Journal.

IT is stated that over 12,000 tracts of land, embracing 2,500,000 acres, remain unpatented in Pennsylvania, upon which there is due the commonwealth $750,000.

AN establishment has been built near Jacksonville, Fla., for the manufacture of marmalade of sour oranges. By some strange combination of circumstances this business has heretofore been confined almost exclusively to Scotland. The fruit could easily supply both the raw material and the manufactured article to the whole world, if the necessary effort were made.

THERE were fifty-three suicides in Maine during 1875. Of these eighteen were by hanging, twelve each by shooting and drowning, six by cutting the throat, four by poisoning, and one by shooting with a garter. There were also nine futile attempts at suicide, of which three were by taking poison, two each by drowning and throat-cutting, and one each by hanging and shooting.

LARGE guns, which, when condemned, were formerly broken up by the tedious process of the hammer, are now subjected to the force of explosion with the same result. A charge of dynamite is placed within the lower end of the bore, which is then filled with water. An explosion of the charge breaks the iron into small fragments, in which state it is ready for the smelting or repeating furnace.

IN a carefully-prepared paper on "The Petty Sewerages Trade," read by W. Hubbard before the American Social Science Association, at Boston, were given the following interesting statistics as to the circulation of petty newspapers in various cities of the United States:

Boston	250,000	36,000
New York	900,000	45,000
Philadelphia	674,000	30,000

Cincinnati	230,000	10,000
San Francisco	150,000	7,000
St. Louis	310,000	15,000

DISCONTENT.

Down in a field one day in June
The flowers all bloomed together,
Sunshine, who tried to hide herself,
And drooped, that pleasant weather

A robin who had soared too high,
And felt a little faint,
Was resting near a buttercup
Who wished she were a saint.

For maidens grow so tiring and tall,
She always had a passion
For wanting fifteen when her age
Is just the dozen's fashion.

And buttercups aren't always fit
The same old tiresome color,
While daisies dress in gold and white,
All though their gold is duller.

"Dear robin," said the sad young flower,
"Perhaps you'll not mind trying
To find a site while I'm not here,
Some day, when you are flying"

"You silly thing!" the robin said,
"I'll bring you where I live!
I'd rather be no honest sniff
Than any maiden shy dainty.

"You're not to be compared with grass,
The flush children find you;
In the best buttercup you can,
And thus no fairy leave you.

"Though swallows leave me out of sight,
And better songs entrance,
Perhaps (as we would all go wrong)
With one the many daisies

"Look wrong up to the sun also—
And be content with knowing
That God wished for a buttercup
Just here where you are growing."

SNAILS.

WILLIE and Jamie Stewart were bright, intelligent boys of eight and ten years They had lived altogether in the city, but were now with their parents in the country, and naturally excited over everything new they encountered. Early one spring morning they came running into the house with faces all aglow with excitement

"Oh, father!" exclaimed Willie, "we have seen such a queer-looking animal, with a shell upon its back, slowly crawling up the stone wall!"

"And the part sticking out of the shell looks just like a shiny worm," added Jamie, "only it has something like horns sticking out of its head."

"You mother," said Willie "and when I touched it with a stick it drew itself out of sight. And though we called the shell over and over and shook it hard, we could not see anything more of the animal."

"Pewaw, my chicks, a snail boys, only!" of course, it had no idea of being shook with your stick, as it drew back into its own home and could there defy all danger. If you had let it come when it drew back you might possibly have seen it again thrust forth its head."

"Why, father!" was the shrill answer, a part of the animal! Its own house to live in and crawl about with!"

"Yes, my boys," said Will, and if you and Jamie will lay aside your caps, and sit down by my side, I'll tell you what I know of this singular animal."

The boys, delighted with the prospect of a good talk with their father upon a favorite object, were soon quietly seated near him.

"The snail," resumed Mr Stewart, "is a curious piece of organism. It is in a manner almost as complete as the largest animal. It has a tongue, brain, salivary glands, stomach, gizzard and intestines, liver, heart and blood-vessels, besides there is a purple bag that furnishes a red matter to different parts of the body, together with strong muscles that hold it to the shell, and which harden like tendons at their insertion. These things it has in common with other animals, but it has one striking peculiarity of its own, and that is, eyes on the points of its largest horns."

"What eyes at the end of those tall things we saw sticking up on top of the small head? What a queer place for them!"

"But a very convenient one, Jamie, as you will soon see. When the snail is in motion, four horns are distinctly visible. The two uppermost and largest are provided with an affinity at the extreme end of them in such a way that they can turn at pleasure to any object by a regulating power. And in case of danger—such, for instance, as your approach with a stick—they can, by contraction, hide their eyes even more quickly than you can close your own. And thus no danger can serve you.

And better songs entrance,

And in case of danger—such, for instance, as your approach with a stick—they can, by contraction, hide their eyes even more quickly than you can close your own. And thus no danger can serve you.

"While the eyes above are thus on the alert, two shorter horns in front serve as sort of feelers to prevent the animal running foul of anything. Under these short horns is the mouth, which is provided with a strong pair of jaws, and underneath the shell is a broad and powerful foot, by means of which the snail is enabled to travel with considerable speed. Its shell, also, is composed of lime, with which it devours leaves and other substances seemingly harder than itself With these same teeth it sometimes bites off pieces of its own shell."

"What for?" asked one of the boys.

"When they wish to make some rough edge smooth. The snail, you must know, is quite an ingenious tinkerer. It anxiously watches the progress of its shell, for fear of danger into its shell, but of mending it when broken. Sometimes these animals get crushed, seemingly to pieces, and, to all appearance, are utterly destroyed; yet still they set themselves to work, and in a few days mend all their numerous breaches. The same substance by which the shell was originally made goes to the renewal of the ruined habitation."

"How curious! To think these little creatures are capable of mending their own houses. Please tell us something more about them!"

"The snail is quite voracious, but it chiefly subsists upon the leaves of plants and trees, and it is very dainty in its choice. At the approach of winter it buries itself in the earth or retires to some hole, where it remains in a torpid state during the severity of the season. It is sometimes seen alone, but more frequently in company, during its retreat; several usually being found together, apparently deprived of life and sensation For the purpose of securing greater warmth and safety from danger, this little animal, before winter sets in, forms a cover or lid to the mouth of its shell with its filmy, which soon it up entirely and protects the animal from every outside danger."

"Hubble a door to its own house to keep out the cold and all intruders! Well done, Mr Snail, you have got some sense, if you do creep along so slowly."

"To be sure, it has a good deal of sense, or ruther, Jamie. For it not only closes up the way into its own house, but some times, when this cover is formed too thick, the snail breaks a little air-hole in it—window, as you might say to its shell-house—to counteract the closeness which first proceeded from too great caution In this manner, sheltered in its hole from the weather and away other danger, it sleeps during the long winter months."

"Without any food at all?" asked Willie.

"Per six or seven months, Will; it continues without food or motion, until the genial warmth of spring wakes it up and excites its activity."

"Not much activity about these chaps," laughingly cry'd out Jamie.

"Very true, for we often compare slowness to a snail. However, it usually comes forth in the warm fallow time first warm days in April Breaks open its own door and sallies forth to seek near ishment At first it is not very particular in the choice of its food, almost any vegetable that comes green is welcome, but the succulent plants of the garden are its favorite repast. Of a single artichoke plant, if some seasons, are almost wholly destroyed by them if appearing in numbers.

"A wet season is generally favorable to their production; for this animal cannot bear very dry seasons or dry places as they cause too great a consumption of their slime, without plenty of which they cannot subsist in health and vigor. One thing more I must tell you about the snail's power of mending the wounds of its shell, and of repairing it in a single article. Its power of speech, and so recognized principles of infection, the relations of words are only ascertained by their position in a sentence; hence, Chinese grammar is solely syntax. The purest Chinese is spoken at Nankin, but the same Bible, called the language of the Mandarins, is spoken by the educated in all parts of the Empire.

In Chinese the written character, generally speaking, does not indicate the sound of the word, but gives a kind of hieroglyphic or pictorial representation of the idea or thing to be expressed. Hence there are required as many of these characters or symbols as there are ideas to be represented. In writing and printing the characters are arranged in perpendicular columns, which follow one another from right to left.—Star.

Mother's Boy.

ELBERT CROMWAY is his mother's pet He coaxes and scolds her as the white headed boy. He tells her that many words to her, and, as he often says, vexes her almost to death. Still she loves him fondly and calls him "mother's boy."

Edward Beek is the son of a poor widow, who calls him "mother's comfort." He tries his very best to make his mother happy in spite of her poverty. One day he went to market for her, and as he staggered home-ward under a very heavy load of potatoes a gentleman said to him

"My son, that basket is too heavy for you to carry."

Edward looked in the gentleman's face with a good-natured smile and replied

"It is heavy, sir, but I would rather carry it myself than my mother should carry it."

Now, as you see, both these boys were their mothers' pets Which of them, think you, was the real mother's boy? Surely Elbert, the selfish, was not. The love was all on the mother's side But Edward loved his mother as well as she love. The noble fellow bore his mother's burdens, and was the real, true mother's boy. If you don't know who he was, I want you to show it by teasing your mother's burdens. Will you?—School, Church and Home.

The Chinese Language.

THE Chinese language is one of the monosyllable class of Asiatic languages of which each word uttered forms a single articulation of speech expresses in itself an entire idea or thing. All Chinese words terminate either in a vowel, a diphthong, or a nasal, and of such simple roots there are about 450, all such by the four or five tones or inflections in which they may be spoken, thus producing a corresponding variety of significance, the number of simple words or roots may be increased to about 1,200. Chinese words possess no modification of form, since by having no distinctive parts of speech, and no recognized principles of inflection, the relations of words are only ascertained by their position in a sentence; hence, Chinese grammar is solely syntax. The purest Chinese is spoken at Nankin, but the same Bible, called the language of the Mandarins, is spoken by the educated in all parts of the Empire.

In Chinese the written character, generally speaking, does not indicate the sound of the word, but gives a kind of hieroglyphic or pictorial representation of the idea or thing to be expressed. In writing and printing the characters are arranged in perpendicular columns, which follow one another from right to left.—Star.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

NEVER put ammonia in a painted cage, as they will pick the wires and thus injure the bird.

DO NOT FAIL to Take the tea cups, a pint of sweet milk; add flour to make it very thin batter; have a griddle very hot, butter well and turn on the batter, which should be very thin, and they will take in less than a minute. All made right they will be almost transparent. An eminent physician says they can live on one. Beat the yolks and whites of the eggs separately to a froth.

WHEN your canary droops and moans ill particularly if he shows signs of asthma as a cold, by a wheezing sound, feed him for a week on boiled bread and milk. Mix bird seed and just-seed and give it with the bread pepper plentifully, as a piece of salt pork and tie it up in the cage within reach. Give it also a little saffron in its water now and then—Household (L. I.) Patriot.

TO PREVENT chafing one's bottom or shins in a ride, sprinkle the part well before starting. A piece of alum as large as a hazelnut, dissolved in a half pint of water, is also good. Bathe the parts first severely after and harden the unbruised cuticle The use of this for years with the most beneficial results is sufficient assurance. Alum is not very partizan in the choice of its friends; almost any vegetable that seems green is welcome, but the succulent plants of the garden are its favorite repast. Of a single artichoke plant, if some seasons, are almost wholly destroyed by them if appearing in numbers.

A wet season is generally favorable to their production; for this animal cannot bear very dry seasons or dry places as they cause too great a consumption of their slime, without plenty of which they cannot subsist in health and vigor. One thing more I must tell you about the snail's power of mending the wounds of its shell, and of repairing it in a single article. Its power of speech, and so recognized principles of infection, the relations of words are only ascertained by their position in a sentence; hence, Chinese grammar is solely syntax. The purest Chinese is spoken at Nankin, but the same Bible, called the language of the Mandarins, is spoken by the educated in all parts of the Empire.

Hence there are required as many of these characters or symbols as there are ideas to be represented. In writing and printing the characters are arranged in perpendicular columns, which follow one another from right to left.—Star.

Ladies must be primed as recommended for stimulants, stinning, slap-bolloxing a round, well-proportioned head, with the main branches regularly distributed and far enough apart to admit free air freely to all parts. Yearling trees intended for pyramids may have a few side branches, the smallest of which should be cut clean away, removing only the strongest and best placed. In other respects they are to be pruned as directed for trees of two years' growth. Those having no side branches should be cut back to about two inches from the ground, leaving a single bud to form the future stem.

To be sure, it has a good deal of sense, or ruther, Jamie. For it not only closes up the way into its own home, but some times, when this cover is formed too thick, the snail breaks a little air-hole in it—window, as you might say to its shell-house—to counteract the closeness which first proceeded from too great caution In this manner, sheltered in its hole from the weather and away other danger, it sleeps during the long winter months."

"Without any food at all?" asked Willie.

"Per six or seven months, Will; it continues without food or motion, until the genial warmth of spring wakes it up and excites its activity."

"Not much activity about these chaps," laughingly cry'd out Jamie.

Sell or Eaten Old Cows.

IT costs no more to feed a cow that is profitable to her owner than one producing milk and butter than to keep an inferior animal that consumes a large quantity of food and yields but little milk. A poor milker should have a permanent place in a herd which is kept, not for show nor for breeding purposes solely, but principally for the profit derived from its produce. To keep such a cow is simply to lose money willfully, as the care and feeding of such animals is almost as much as that of the animal which gives double her amount of milk. It may be argued that a cow is worth more to raise calves, but the herd may be so improved by judicious selection as to have all good cows. In a stock of forty we should suppose that there are at least three or four that are positively indifferent, milkers. By testing the milk of these cows carefully, and ascertaining the amount of produce in butter to be made from the average of what might be fairly expected from the best selected specimen in the herd, there is no trouble in finding out the cows that should stand so that all the stock be under the ground and no more. In any dry, gravelly ground, the holes should be dug twice the usual size and depth and filled in with good loamy soil. If trees are tall and much spread or wide, a stake should be planted with the tree, to which it should be tied in such a manner as to avoid chafing. Any piece of matting or cloth may be put in between the tree and the stake. When the tree is planted it should be left in the ground for a month and a foot beyond five or six inches deep of rough manure or litter. This is particularly necessary in dry ground, as it helps the roots and enables the remaining buds to push with vigor. In the case of older trees of extra size the pruning must be in proportion; as a general thing it will be safe to shorten all the previous year's shoots to three or four buds at their base, and where the branches are very numerous some may be cut out entirely. By careful trees, of two or three years' growth, with a number of well-placed branches, will require to be pruned with a watchful object in view, viz., the growth of the tree and the finest fruit. The branches must be cut into the former a pyramid by shortening the lower ones, say one-half, those above them shorter, and the upper ones around the leading shoot to within two or three buds of their base. The leader itself must be shortened back one-half or more. When trees have been dried or injured much by exposure the pruning must be closer than if in good order. Dwarf standard trees and dwarf

An Incident in the Life of the Late Dr. S. G. Howe.

SOON after the success of the Greek revolution Dr. Howe went to Paris on a visit, and was there when one of the Polish insurrections was put down. The disaster filled Paris with crowds of Polish refugees. A committee for the relief of these sufferers was formed, of which Lafayette was President. Dr. Howe was one of the members of the committee, and got into the secret and won the affection of Lafayette by his many services. During the early proceedings of this committee it was found necessary to employ a secret agent to go to Berlin. From this somewhat mean duty most readily do undertake other perilous deeds shrank, and among those who were in the secret, Lafayette did not find a single volunteer. At length Dr. Howe volunteered to face the peril, but Lafayette refused the offer, because, he said, he could not spare Dr. Howe from the work in Paris. But the necessity was urgent, and as no other person could be found for the task, Lafayette reluctantly consented to the proposal. Dr. Howe lodged with Favre de Prescillion, a remedy for delirium tremens, called "Dr. Howe's Remedy," and it remedy for Pain, Bowel Complaints, and an unequaled Liniment for cuts, bruises and incase flesh, which has the Eagle Catarrh Remedy has known the world over as a great specific for Catarrh, and "Cold in the Head" ever given to the public. They are sold by druggists.

PERMIT US TO ASSURE—CURED BY THE GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DR. R. V. PIERCE

Dear Sir—Twenty years ago I was ship-wrecked on the Atlantic Ocean, and the cold and exposure caused a large abscess to form on each leg, which kept continually discharging. I was attending a doctor in Liverpool, Havre, New Orleans, New York, and at the last one in the States I was told by the doctors wanted to take one leg off. Finally after spending hundreds of dollars, I was persuaded to try your "Golden Medical Discovery," and now, in less than three months after taking the first bottle, I am thankful to say I am completely cured, and for the first time in ten years can put my left foot to the ground. I am at home nearly every evening, and shall be glad to satisfy any person of the truth of this statement. I am, sir, yours, respectfully,

—The remarkable discovery of a bed of ice in the Island of Bonin has excited much scientific interest, and investigations into the phenomenon are to be made by geologists. It appears that a company exploring the mines and forests discovered a mountain behind the town of Bonin came upon this bed of ice about 2,500 feet above the sea-level, and two miles in circumference. On the wind clearing away for a moment the cloak of sulphurous steam with which the lake was covered a mound of water was seen ten feet high at least in the centre, but level with the surface, and caused by chalition. The margin of the lake consists of beds of sulphur, and the overflowing found exit by a waterfall of great height.

ECONOMY.—You will save money by using Procter & Gamble's Mottled Family Soap. It will not waste nor become soft like ordinary yellow soaps; even used in warm water, nor is it chemically with articles injurious to clothes. Ask your grocer for it, and you will find it for you purchase their brand. To protect their brand from imitators Procter & Gamble patented it, and the patent was sustained in the United States Courts.

Examine the stamp on the bars when you buy. Take their Soap only.

GEN. Beauregard has come up like a little man, and asked Congress to remove his political disabilities.

It is believed that the Democrats will select Philadelphia as the place, and the 4th of July as the time for inviting their National Convention.

Vice President Perry's case is regarded as settled in his favor. He will continue to preside over the Senate for the remainder of Henry Wilson's term, and will be entitled to the Vice President's salary, which is $8,000 per annum.

POOR SAM COX! His great statesmanship, as displayed in the recent amnesty dimension, when he exclaimed, "O, Blaine, do dry up!" "the honorable bigora from Maine," and "I have killed Jim Blaine," is not appreciated by the people, who think any leafer might say as much.

THE largest church collection on record is the one taken up at the Moody and Sankey meeting in Philadelphia on Wednesday evening. The occasion was the closing of these gentlemen's labors in the City of Brotherly Love, and the twenty-first anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association, for the benefit of which the contributions, which foot up to the snug sum of $100,000, were made.

JOSEPH SMITH, son of the Mormon prophet, and President of the organization called The Latter-Day Saints, says the new institution comprises 15,000 members scattered throughout the United States, Europe, and the Sandwich Islands. They adhere to the "original faith," denounce polygamy, and reject Brigham Young's claim to the leadership. In Mr. Smith's estimation polygamy will never be abandoned by the Mormons. It must either be crushed out by superior power or sapped by overpowering public opinion. Polygamy exists to-day by failure of the people of the United States to enforce their own moral enactments.

BARNEY CAUFIELD, of Chicago, came up as evidence for Hill under Blaine's arraignment, and testified that the quarters of the rebel prisoners at Camp Douglas were too uncomfortable for them, and that they suffered terribly on that account. When Mr. Blaine cross-examined him by asking if they were not the same quarters that were occupied by the Union soldiers as a recruiting station, his memory suddenly become exceedingly bad, and he could not possibly remember. The southern sympathies of northern Democrats in Congress lead them into some ridiculously unconfortable positions, which they would fain charter a locomotive to crawl out of.

COX and Hill got riled beyond the bounds of prudence when Blaine showed up the position of the excited leaders of the Democratic party, and in their rage snatched off their patient mask, exhibiting the animus and intentions of this party in all its hideous deformity. After cooling off, the leaders of the democracy are bewailing this rash indiscretion and resumed the mask again are trying to persuade the people it was all an ugly dream. Their speeches as delivered and as printed are as different as their real appearance and masked appearance. Hill was three days "revising" his speech and making it fit to come before the public. It is too transparent a trand to let Congressmen deliver one speech for Congress to print another for the people. They say what they mean, and print what they want the people to think they mean. It is greatly to their disadvantage that the people generally read the news papers report, and not the journal record.

THE Italian Government has assumed a determined course in regard to education, and insists that the schools shall be subjected to State inspection. The Episcopal seminary at Como having refused to admit a Government inspector it has been closed by the Government. Now what will the Pope do? It will be useless to curse the King, for he has already been excommunicated, and continues to wax fat under the ban.

PETITION for Re—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Charlevoix, held at the Probate office in the village of Charlevoix, on Monday, the 7th day of February, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six.

Present, Hon. Hiram Bentis, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Trim, late of the township of Charlevoix, in said county, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Wenzel Holz, widow of said deceased, praying for reasons therein set forth, that administration of said estate may be granted to Frederick Holz or to some other suitable person.

Thereupon it is Ordered, That Monday, the tenth day of March next, at one o'clock in the forenoon be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the village of Charlevoix, and show cause why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted: And it is further ordered that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said County of Charlevoix, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

"However friendly we might feel to a lower peninsula candidate—providing he was the right kind of a man, and one to whom the party might repose confidence; still we are not among those who, simply because the favor a certain locality, are willing to put aside a well tried and faithful representative. If at any time in its history, the Republican party require men of the right stamp, who have stood true to its principles and the integrity of the Union, it is now. With a legion of confederate scamps at the front, defiant in spirit and fierce in purpose, to the rolling of drums and the tramp of armed men, with the power of the purse-strings controlled by a democratic House of Representatives, we cannot afford to give untrue to the personal integrity of the principles of our party. Such men we must support for Congress even with all our might, and in preference to any sectional claims whatsoever."

CARPENTER & BARTHOLOMEW will exhaust many of their goods at cost for the next thirty days, to make room for their Spring stock.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.—It is our painful duty to record a distressing accident which occurred to our esteemed fellow citizen, M. J. Stockman, Esq., on Saturday. Bernard Burns, Esq., of Marion, was on that day canvassing our town for a patent fire-kindler, for which he is agent. He was demonstrating the merits of the article in Mr. Stockman's store, tamping being the article with which it was saturated. In lighting it a drop of the liquid fire dropping into the can of benzine, directly over which he stood, and it at once ignited. He seized it, carefully, and in an effort to throw it out doors, threw it directly in Mr. Stockman's face, and the latter gentleman was soon enveloped in flame. He ran out and plunged himself into a snow bank, and succeeded in extinguishing the fire, but not until it had caused sad havoc with him. His face, neck and hands were found to be burned in a terrible manner, the extent of which he imagined when we state that the paper collar was burned from his neck. Dr. Lewis was at once summoned and under his treatment Mr. Stockman is in a fair way of recovery, if no bad luck overtakes him. It is unnecessary for us to state that patent fire kindlers are at a discount in Charlevoix.

OUR HARBOR.

The Revised Report of Colonel Mansfield.

On the 6th of last month the Senate agreed to a resolution introduced by Senator Ferry, directing the Secretary of War to "report to the Senate upon the importance of improving the harbor of Charlevoix, in the State of Michigan, and to transmit a revised estimate of the amount necessary to complete the same." On the 19th, the Secretary of War, in compliance with such resolution, submitted Col. Mansfield's revised report, a copy of which lies before us.

The report is brief, and is more favorable than the original in only one particular, viz: a reduction in estimated cost. But the advantage of this change is fully counterbalanced by a proper climate function in the proposed latest of the work.

The Col. states that he "believes all the facts relating thereto were fully set forth in the report of Major Wheeler in 1866, and in his own of 1873." He adds that "both reports say that the interests of commerce do not require a harbor of refuge here."

The latter is an ugly sounding clause, true only so far as it is made so by the judgment of two men who know more about geometry and theodolites than they do of the wants of commerce. It cannot be denied that it is a formidable impediment in the way of success; but its refutation is confidently hoped for.

A disposition is plainly apparent in the report to adhere strictly to the views of the old report where any document can be worked to our side of the question thereby; but we notice a glaring and inconsistent departure in one particular, where the original opinion was very much in our favor: Col. Mansfield stated in our hearing that the present outer pier would be considered substantial, and that the position was admirably well chosen. This view was also set forth in his first report. In his "revised report" he figures in an item of $200 "for removing old pier, which cannot be utilized." Is this the kind of consistency they teach at West Point?

After making an inconsiderable reduction in the original estimate he says: "A less sum of money will, no doubt, make a harbor here to serve the wants of the people in this locality for some time to come, and will not interfere with carrying out the original plan, being simply a part of it."

This latter plan contemplates a change in the outer pier, and 12 feet dep. The cost to be $91,303.

If not only hope for an appropriation lies in this "revised report," ourchances are no better now than they were in 1866. However, let us not look back, but remain in the furrow, with our hand to the plow.

"SHUTTLE-COCK EDITORS."—The Traverse Bay Eagle has fluttered itself into a white heat of indignation at the thoughtless act of two papers in the 9th Congressional District changing their position on what it terms "the third term question," and lashes itself into a righteous fury over the heads of the Manistee Times and Charlevoix SENTINEL. The SENTINEL's position on this subject has never changed one iota up to date; but it is liable to,—take notice, Mr. Eagle. We stand ourself to no unchangeable creed or perpetual dogma, in this age of political uncertainty and hour of national danger. Now, we look upon the third term question as a fallacy of Democratic origin, and a bait which Gen. Grant is not foolish enough to nibble at, nor the Republican party indiscreet enough to recognize as possessing any substantial force. But, as we have intimated, political necessity may change this spook into a materiality that will drive the rebel fire-eaters back to their Ku-Klux chambers, and their northern friends back to their anti-bellum coverts, should Confederate impudence continue to develop itself. One who cannot change his opinion when time develops good reasons for so doing, is a bigot and fanatic; and if we are not mistaken we have seen the substance of this argument in the columns of the Eagle, in times past. Believing Mr. Hubbell to have been honest in the expression of his convictions, we accepted his reasons as satisfactory, and withdrew our censure. We are not ashamed of individuals and their friends compelled us to change our position in relation thereto, we regard the third term question as a necessity; and that is just the way Mr. Hubbell regarded it when he voted negatively on the so-called third term resolution. Let the Eagle sharpen its beak and talons and scan the political skies of the 9th District for other prey.

THE Democratic members of the United States Senate have held a caucus, and decided that "none of the Godsent men" which has characterized the action of that party in the House shall be permitted in the Senate. In other words, the rebel element of the party shall be more quiet in that body, lest they totally destroy their few remaining hopes of getting the Confederate party into power.

OLD SAM MOORE.

He of Two-Bark Notoriety—His Wonderings.

All our readers will remember old commercial Capt Samuel Moore, who came to the Pine Lake region two years ago in the little schooner Jim, and bought tan-bark during the summer. After quite a diversified career around the head of South Arm and this place he disappeared, and his whereabouts has not been known until the following article in a New Orleans paper disclosed the story of his wanderings:

"On the 1st of September last, from the good port of Milwaukee, on Lake Michigan, a small trading schooner named the "Gem," put out with a fresh breeze as a harbinger of a pleasant passage. Her crew were Capt. Samuel Moore and his son, both long engaged on the lakes in bartering with the Indians, exchanging goods for pelf(ry, but the business falling off, they thought there might be a chance in Southern waters.

Accordingly they laid in a stock of goods and stood out from Milwaukee, bound for the mouth of the Illinois Canal, thence to the Illinois River, and down it and the Mississippi River to New Orleans. After the Father of Waters had been reached, the unfortunate Captain and his son fell sick, barely able to manage their little craft, they drifted down with the current, stopping here and there, at the several small towns, with the intention of selling their stock, but the increase of the malarial fever prevented their doing much.

They were robbed time and again, and for some days before they reached New Orleans were almost in a state of starvation. After a long and most serious trip, the little schooner Gem arrived, long, lank, and—Capt. Moore managed to moor her at the head of St. Mary street. Capt. George Norton, Harbor Master, boarding the vessel, discovered the suffering condition of the two men, and sending at once to the steamship Haytian, procured food enough to relieve the hunger of the captain and his son.

The exposure and trials of the trip laid them low, and it was evident that they were very sick, so Capt. Norton ordered a cab and took both to the Charity Hospital, where medical attendance was rendered. The schooner was secured and carefully guarded under Capt. Norton's orders, and all the goods found on board inventoried.

The whole tale is a sad one, and the denouement peculiarly affecting. The two voyagers, starting out with bright hopes, were last night placed in their beds in a ward of the Hospital."

It is said that Capt. Moore and his son recovered and went west. The extent of our anxiety for the Captain is measured only by the existence of a small book account in the SENTINEL office against him.

33 inch cambrics in prints at 10 cts.—Fox, Rose & Buttars.

A Cheboygan paper contains the following: "Died in the town of Inverness, in this county, January 12th, Duncan McKichen. Mr. Kichen was born at Castleford, England, January 5th, 1801, and consequently only lacked three days of being seventy-five years old. He entered the British navy when quite young, and was present at the famous flag ship Asia, at the battle of Navarena and participated in that, and several other naval engagements. Having served in this time in the English navy he became a sailor, and visited most all the principal countries of the globe. Coming to this country he enlisted in the American navy for eighteen months, and at the breaking out of the Florida War enlisted as a soldier, and fought the Indians in the everglades of the South. After the war closed he retired to private life, and engaged in farming. Mr. Kitchen has lived in Cheboygan County for the past twenty-five years, honored and respected by all who knew him."

FELIX GOLEY.

Sermons and healthy, but always slow,
Large and lazy, was Peleg Brice;
Labor and he Did disagree;
Why he should injure, he could not see.

The last thing words in his garden grew;
His seeds were many, his contents few;
Little he made
The last in trade;
And borrowed money he never paid.

Thrifty and honest, he calmly slept;
While others hurried, he calmly kept;
While others hurried, he humbly crept;
And he seemed resigned
To be left behind.

In the journey of life, by all his kind.

Old age came on, and his face grew pale;
His health and vigor began to fail;
And he lived to learn
That his strength
Would never the wheel of fortune turn.

Friendless he lived, and, when broken down,
Became a burden upon the town;
He lived in vain;
He died in pain;
An object of pity and fear beside.

Yet many will live in sloth and ease,
Without a thought of the use of these;
Their wants will spend
And in the end
Will go to the grave without a friend.
—Eugene J. Hall, in Chicago Tribune.

BY THE KING'S COMMAND.

HIS MAJESTY KING LOUIS II., whose birthday had been celebrated in the most private manner, withdrew at an early hour to his room, on retiring, as the chamberlain asserted to dispatch important business.

People smiled at the "important business" alleged by the officious chamberlain. The whole court knew His Majesty's "important business," and was aware that the King avoided society and loved solitude.

The pretty little steamer floats from morning till night on the Starenberg Sea, whose clear blue water is lightly ruffled by the east winds, ready at any moment to be used by the King.

The breeze brings the fragrance of the cantilolias from Roseleaf, the little parasline the King loves. Perhaps at the very moment that the chamberlain is talking of "important business," his vessel is leaving him to the shore of this poetic Island—to the King is already riding at over full and meadow in pursuit of—solitude. King Louis II has hitherto known but few passions magnificent scenery, which he seeks and finds on mountains, music, and—horses. He knows but one pleasure—riding. Scarcely are the reports of his pistols heard when the King is thrown himself into the saddle and dashes restlessly away, in all weathers. No one is allowed to accompany him, no one to attend. The people of Munich like to talk about the King, but now and then little incidents occur in his solitary wanderings become public.

The slender young man attired in hunting costume had reached the shore several minutes, but still lingered in the boat, above whose yellow sides a small blue and white banner floated. Resting his hand on his arm, he sat gazing thoughtfully into the darkness. Everything was still around, a sound save the chirping of the crickets and the thudding of the cow-bells echoing from the lofty snow-clad Alps, a light breeze shook the tops of the firs and birches and sighed over the waves. Doubtless it seemed to the hunter that the majesty of all this was broke in upon by incomprehensible murmurs, as if he heard in the outer world the same strange voices which had before addressed his soul and to which he could give no words. He felt so strangely moved everything he beheld aroused and appeared to litter so unconscious appeal. He saw the stars rise behind the mountains, he brought it on her horses and carried it with us. But you, gentlemen, who presided as by pure infidelities will you drove us out of the Union, you, who then claimed to be the only people of the Union which has ever been denounced as a league with death and a covenant with hell, you who followed the flag under the emblem who fought it have made peace and gone to their homes, you we have no concessions to make. We have no compromises to offer, and while we are ready to make every sacrifice for the preservation of the Union, defeated and oppressed, will confess no sin to forgiveness. We come empty handed to you we come to you as conquerors, we say this: We come even to you in no spirit of bitterness. We have no exhibition, and that is to add our political power to the political power of the North. Reconstruction, as you call it, has been a failure. It has failed, and how by the men who had denounced it as a failure great as it was, we are ready to say that we can do repair it. We accept the Union as it is, we abide by the results of the war, we stand by the Republican party, we accept all your amendments and to forget your old sin.

Here is a full expression of the Democratic Conservatism of the South. The complaint is that the South was fatally wronged, that it went out because the North would not keep its pledges and would not be faithful to the Constitution; that the South fought for Constitution, and that it for four years carried that Constitution in its bosom, to preserve and keep it sacred; that the North followed them with war, invaded their soil, occupied their States and accomplished with ruthless war, harassed and distressed the faithful South, who had become the depositary of real principles of the Union; and now that what wrongs had the South sustained? What pledge had been broken? What part of the Constitution had been violated? The South stood on its secession upon the distinct ground that the Union was a league, that the States were sovereign electoral acts, elected Abraham Lincoln President. That election was declared by the Democratic party to be the destruction of the Union. South Carolina seceded, and Jefferson Davis was elected President of the Confederacy before Mr. Lincoln was even inaugurated. At the time of the election it was contended there was a Democratic majority in both branches of the Congress of the United States, but that majority was exclusively Democratic. No wrong has been perpetrated, no wrong was done to the South, which was not done by a majority of the Democratic party, and no pledge has been violated which was not violated by the Democratic party. The Republican party was under pledge and no interference with slavery where it existed in the States, and no such interference was ever attempted. The Republican party had no power to do anything for the purpose of dissolving the Union, and no such purpose was ever entertained by it. The South had no longer absolutely control and in which it had become a minority, and which it could not rule, and it seceded in pursuance of a theory which was not a part of the Constitution, but which was only a theory of the Democratic party. Mr. Hill's arraignment of the North was not a repetition of the speeches made by Democrats in 1860 and 1861. It is declaimer of truth—more will ascertain, but it is not a part of the foundation of the controversy.

After reestablishing the "wrongs and outrages" heaped upon the "South" by the war upon those who had sought to secede, by inviting the battalions of justice upon the rebel prisoners of Jeff Davis, Douglas Fluney and other places where they had been confined—Mr. Hill declared that the South, being guiltless of wrong, was not to assume the part to be guilty in the future, and besides asking for forgiveness. The South had come back to Congress to aid its old friends and abandoned children. The conquered heads, in getting possession of the Government, and not to ask pardon of a Government which they had left to interfere in their self control.

But he summed up the whole story in the defiant declaration that "MANITOU DOES NO APOLOGIZE TO TRAITORS," and "THE SOUTH HAS NEVER REPENTED OF THE REBELLION, WILL CONFESS NO SIN TO FORGIVENESS."

The line is here drawn between the party to which Mr. Hill belongs in the South, and it is proclaimed that the South cannot be forgiven into the Union because of any sin. The declaration, hurled defiantly at the representatives of the loyal North by a virtual rebel leader, defeated the appeal, and further than that, when taken down in shorthand and published in the South should be shot down as a pirate and outlaw, was vociferously applauded by the Democratic St. Louis Convention, whose hands are red with the blood of countless victims of the South and the North shed in the "lost cause." The "manly principle" stated, make but a sorry picture playing the part of sentry. Right he earns no such sympathy for himself and associates by claiming that the horrors inflicted upon the South were unjustifiable, and therefore not but appropriate punishments for the armed resistance of the Southern people.

In all the history of the rebellion we do not think there is a parallel for the brazen impudence and defiant insolence displayed by Ben Hill, of Georgia, in this debate. Ten years have passed since the war. In that time the Northern people have been dealing with these rebels in a spirit of generous liberality. No such thing as vindictiveness has existed or been manifested. All have been admitted to suffrage. All but a handful have had their political rehabilitation. Ben Hill himself sits in Congress through the grace and amnesty of the people he betrayed. Nevertheless the first one he makes of his position is to fiercely malign the generous spirit and purpose which has characterized the North toward the South, and to declare that

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Two Sensations—Centennial Swindling—Literary Enterprise.

A Coke-walk—Edward S. Stokes—The Evening Telegram.

Julius Cæsar—Paradise Lost.

All Sorts.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1, 1876

TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL:—

In the matter of sensation this week New York has nothing to offer that will compare with the two that come to us from the Bay State. Both of these are on a scale to entitle them to be recorded among causes celebres. The Northampton Bank robbery, which was accomplished by the at present fashionable expedient of gagging the cashier, and locking his household, and bringing him to disclose the combination on the vault lock, resulted in the carrying off of three-quarters of a million in bonds and currency. And the presence of this large sum in a country bank, by the way, is a striking illustration of the abnormal condition of finances. While merchants and the large purchasing class feel the scarcity of money, the banks and among centers are fairly congested with this blood of trade, which hardly anything short of a hue and cry suffices to set in motion.

The other sensation, as the reader has doubtless already guessed, is the bug swindle at the "Hub," where another shoemaker, ex-Methodist preacher, and ex-Congressman, the publisher of unwholly popular, and a prominent capitalist, after an unparalleled course of two years forging and swindling, suddenly bursts as completely as any soap-bubble, and quietly slips off to a country where no unpleasant extradition treaty exists to return him to his anxious friends.

This gentleman sailed from New York to Rotterdam with his family, on Tuesday last, carrying with him, as it is said, over $200,000 of his ill-gotten gains. The amount of his forgeries, all told, is about $400,000, and betray remarkable audacity and nerve, to say nothing of an amount of luck in escaping detection during the long period of his operations, which goes far toward verifying the saying, that "The Devil takes care of his own." If Winslow's exploits are a correct indication, our second century finds us at an advanced stage of the swindler's art, the perfection of which would make the petty peculations of revolutionary times hang their heads with shame and envy. If we can show equal progress in other branches, we may well be proud of our achievements.

A long article appears in the Times of last Tuesday, the contents, of which are valuable to any one interested in statistics of such crimes. It gives a list of the murders which have been reported in New York during the five years ending with last month, together with the fate of the criminals. The number foots up two hundred and eighty-nine, and of this army of manslikers only seven have expiated their crime on the gallows, and over one-fourth of the whole list never were brought to trial at all. It is a shameful showing, and is enough to convince any one that justice in New York is indeed a blind goddess, too blind to catch and punish the offenders against her laws. It is a most eloquent arraignment of "Boss" government, especially in its judicial ramifications, and ought to awaken sufficient popular indignation to inaugurate some genuine reforms.

In those days when the time-honored devices for "raising the wind" for charitable purposes—fairs, raffles, church concerts, and the like—are getting rather threadbare, the hint thus furnished may be a valuable one; though whether we "poor white trash" could give to such affairs the interest imparted by the lowest elegance of our sable "bred-ren," experience alone can determine.

Hardly any other name than the one it bears, could guarantee the success of such a magazine as the new "Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly," which with the opening of the Centennial year, has inaugurated a new era in American publishing. It is nearly double the size of any other similar periodical, and carries those an many illustrations as any other. These illustrations alone (80 to 100 in number) cost over four thousand dollars for each issue. The astonishing part of it all, however, is, that this great mass of illustrated literature is sold for 20 c a copy, or $2.50 per year. As a matter of course, a magazine of this size, quality, and cheapness sweeps the country. Of the initial number, about 70,000 have already been sold, while of the February issue, just out, the edition must be nearly doubled, for in addition to all its other attractions, this issue contains the opening chapters of Joaquin Miller's first novel, "The Pink Countess," purchased at heavy cost by Frank Leslie, expressly for this periodical. The great name which the poet of the Sierras has made for himself on either side of the Atlantic attaches a deep interest to his first effort in serious fiction, and its appearance in this extremely inexpensive form will give it the widest currency.

It would be natural to suppose that the sole management of such a publishing house would be task enough for any one man, but Mr. Leslie finds time in spite of it all to attend to his duties as Chief of the New York State Centennial Commission, which as may readily be conceived, is no sinecure, and to him are largely due the thanks of the Empire State for the comprehensive and discriminating representation which she will have next Summer.

The Evening Telegram, a sort of a pull in the Herald's kite, has been making itself very "numerous" lately over the almost universal violation of the ordinances regarding street encumbrance, and has fairly goaded the authorities into making several rubbish merchants whose signs project beyond a certain or who cover the sidewalks with furniture, dry-goods, or other merchandize, to more effectually attract custom. The superintendent of this bureau has sputtered and carried it in triumph many cart-loads of the offending articles, which have since quietly to be redeemed by their owners, whose curses against this summary but salutary, enforcement are both loud and deep. If the Telegram, or some other newspaper, would only be equally zealous and successful in urging some still more necessary reforms in high places, it would be entitled to a correspondingly greater share of public gratitude.

Edward S. Stokes' ineffectual effort to secure a discharge has developed in him an extraordinary amount of determination. He has signified his intention to appeal to every judge in the State ere he will cease his demands for justice. Claiming that the period of imprisonments preceding and during the trial (some year and a half) should apply on his sentence, thus giving him his liberty in a month or so. The Governor has shown himself very decided in the matter, and meets public sentiment by refusing all recognition of the petition of Fisk's murderer.

"Julius Cæsar," at Booth's, continues to create increasing interest. About eighty students of Yale College came here to witness its performance on one evening of last week, and on another, a wealthy Fifth Avenue lady invited a hundred and thirty friends to enjoy the treat in her company. Yesterday a special matinee was given to accommodate the theatrical profession of the city, most of whom were the guests of the managers, Messrs. Jarrett & Palmer.

Montague, that dreadful destroyer of feminine peace of mind, having broken the hearts of all the New York ladies, is now playing in Brooklyn, where he is creating equal havoc.

Our first taste of Italian Opera this season, is now being given us by Mme. Titiens, at the Academy of Music. The first work given was Norma, in which Mme. Titiens made a very favorable impression. The silver-voiced tenor, Brignoli, has returned from Europe, where he has been singing for several years, but has made no appearance here as yet. Early in February, Miss Adelaide Phillips will also appear in Opera at the Academy, the occasion being the debut of her sister, Miss Matilde Phillips, who has just finished her musical studies and is said to be a singer of great promise.

The grand organ built by Roosevelt for Chickering Hall, has at last been completed, and has just been opened in the presence of a large audience by the leading organist of the city. The magnificent instrument, which cost $15,000, is one of the finest in the country, and confirms to the Messrs. Chickering the honor of having given New York her most organ and perfectly equipped concert hall.

MICHIGAN'S FAVORITE PAPER.

The Detroit Tribune.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1876.

THE DETROIT TRIBUNE will enter upon the new year thoroughly equipped in all its departments and fully equipped to meet the wants of its large and growing constituency. The change in the relative condition of parties by which, for the first time in eighteen years, both Houses of the Legislature will be under the control of the Senate and the Executive of one party, and the spectacle of another Presidential canvass, will give fresh interest to many public questions, which will be treated as they ever are, with intelligence and candor. The coming year will also bring the centennial anniversary of many interesting events in our early annals, and will furnish occasion for notice and discussion of many topics bearing upon the history, prosperity and character of the nation. It is hope to be enabled with exciting events, such as will attract the attention of the people of all sections, creating an unusual demand for the publications of newspapers, among which THE DETROIT TRIBUNE stands foremost, accustomed as we are to the largest, and last but not least, to do it.

The commercial contest is certain to be the most hotly contested campaign that has ever been made since the organization of the Government. The Democratic party, long and justly excluded from power, but now assuming by their success in 1874, will make an most desperate and determined struggle to get control of the National Government. Believing that the success of this organization would be a national calamity, THE TRIBUNE will spare no energy of means or pen to prevent so direful a result. Maintaining Republican principles, and as it believes that on the general welfare, and holding party organization as simply the agency to carry them into effect in the administration of government, it gives to the Republican party an outspoken and hearty, but never blind and dishonest, support. Faults of policy and abuses in administration it will not be slow to point out and seek to have removed, to the end that the people may be better served. It will labor unceasingly for such a public sentiment, and to diffuse such general information on all questions of politics as shall lead to a grand and glorious Republican triumph, with which fitly to usher upon the second hundred years of the life of the republic.

In the News department of THE TRIBUNE will be found a complete, accurate, and thoroughly reliable compilation of the events of the day, with special correspondents, for the purpose of giving the earliest authentic news in the most attractive and readable form. Its compilations of Michigan news, largely gathered by its own paid correspondents, far surpasses in variety and extent that furnished by any other Detroit paper.

Its Agricultural Department has only limitation—nothing equal to it. Its value is seen in the voluminous correspondence from particular farmers and their wives, who make it their medium for exchanging views and intelligence.

Its Commercial department embraces market reports that cannot be excelled for accuracy, prepared with the greatest labor and pains, so that they can be implicitly relied on.

Its stories, poetry and miscellany are all selected with the greatest care, and from the best attainable sources, the design being to make THE TRIBUNE a most welcome, enjoyable and useful visitor in every home.

In short we aim to make

as money, long experience, practiced skill, a pride in its paper, and untiring zeal can possibly produce. That THE TRIBUNE will continue to outstrip all rivals in the completeness and excellence of its various editions, we intend there shall be no doubt about.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, it should be borne in mind is the LARGEST weekly paper in the State, being EIGHT COLUMNS larger than any of the other Detroit papers, thus furnishing very much more reading matter. It is carefully edited, and, altogether, has no equal anywhere in the West, in point of real value and general attractiveness in all its departments. It will be kept fully up to its previous standard, which has given it an immensely wider circulation throughout Michigan than any other paper published either within or without our borders. There is probably not a school district in the State where THE TRIBUNE is not to be found.

The prices of THE TRIBUNE in its various editions are as follows: Daily, $10.00 per year, including postage; $5.20 for six months; $2.65 for three months. TRI-WEEKLY, $5.50 per year, including postage; $2.85 for six months; $1.35 for three months. Weekly, $2 per year for single subscriptions; $1.60 in clubs of five; $1.75 in clubs of ten; $1.60 in clubs of twenty—all these prices including postage, which we have to pay. A large and elegant map of Michigan (lower peninsula), all ready to hang upon the wall, is also given to every subscriber to THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE for 30 cents extra. This offer is also an inducement to new subscribe, for no map is to be given to anyone not on clear to $1.80. Address all letters to Adventures of a Bashful Man.

I AM a very bashful man. I have a peculiar habit of blushing whenever spoken to by a lady. I always try to avoid their company as much as possible. I have tried many ways to cure myself of this weakness, but in every way I have failed. I am very poly when in company of gentlemen, but when I see a lady twenty rods off I feel cold all over. I love them dearly (bless their hearts), but I would rather face a band of Texas raiders or a pound of Limburger cheese than I would a female. I am not an old bachelor yet, but I will be if I don't cure myself. About a week ago a friend invited me to make a call on some young ladies with him. I refused at first, but with much persuasion, and telling me that I would get over my weakness by associating with the opposite sex more. I at last consented to accompany him. I passed around for about an hour, putting a pint of hair oil on my head, four coats of black ing on my boots, etc., then we started. When we arrived at the house my first accident was to step on a little lap-dog which ran out to the door. We were ushered into the room, where sat four of the most charming girls that man ever beheld. We went through the introduction ceremony in right being regarded as "make a chair." I walked awkwardly across the room, and sat down in an "easy-chair." It was lower than I was accustomed to, and down I came with my whole weight. I made a fruit attempt to smile. I dared not look up, but I heard a "giggling" which sounded to me worse than a band organ. All went on smoothly till about nine o'clock when one on the girls requested my autograph. She produced a pen, ink and her album. I took up the pen with a trembling hand, reached across the table to dip the pen in the ink. I reached too far, and consequently my sleeve caught on the top of the bottle, and the contents rushed forth and spread itself over the table. Acting under a sudden impulse I took out my handkerchief and commenced "sopping" up the ink. I stammered out an apology the best I could, all the while being informed that it was only a trifle. Oh! how I did long for home. I never knew the value of home till then. The cold sweat stood on my forehead, the lower part of my face began to twitch, I trembled, and—I sunk in a chair.

I sat there like a statue for half an hour; all efforts to draw me into conversation proved useless. Presently some refreshments were introduced. One of the ladies passed me out a glass of wine. With a quivering hand I raised the glass to my mouth, and being confused, or the wine stronger than usual being Holland Gin, I coughed, choked, and not thinking of the condition of my handkerchief I drew it forth and wiped my face with it.

I took in the situation; but it was too much for me. I rose from the room, stopped at the first street gas-post I met, thought was my overcoat and hat—into which I groped—and struck a straight line for home. I sat in my room with a downcast countenance till I was aroused by a knock at the door. It turned out to be a bashful friend with my hat and coat. He departed to return the cloak and muff and I locked the door, got out a paper of arsenic, and a revolver, tied a rope over the door with a noose at the end, and—went to bed.—W. J. Hardige.

Hand-Shaking.

"Who is he that will strike hands with me?" asks Job. "A man void of reason, standing strikes hands and becometh surety in the presence of his friends," saith the wise King of Israel. In this old-world custom of striking hands, hand-shaking, no doubt, originated, for before it became a mere friendly greeting a shake of the hand was accepted as a pledge. When Ferdinand and Miranda strike their tender bargain he says: "Here's my hand," and she replies: "And mine with my heart on it." Dunbar, Lord Treasurer of Scotland, congratulating Yelverton upon having made his peace a count, said to him: "I will desire your friendship as you do mine, and I will promise to do you my best; whereupon as pledge I give you my hand." And so, shaking Yelverton by the hand, he bade him farewell. Nowadays a shake of the hand may mean very much or nothing at all. The strong, hearty grip for gift of two old, long-parted friends, meeting unexpectedly, is one thing; the nerveless, loose, indifferent clasp of acquaintanceship another. Sydney Smith attempted to classify hand shakes, dividing them into the high cell, the sepulchral, the digitory, the shake-exalting, and the shake-repelling. The first was practiced by the then Archbishop of York, "who kept his right hand, carried your hand aloft to a level with his chin, and gave it a rapid, short shake." Sir John Mackintosh affected the sepulchral, "laying his open hand flat on your palm, so coldly you were hardly aware of its contiguity." The digitory—in favor with the high clergy—was adopted by Broughton, who coolly patforth his forefinger with "How are you?" The shakus rusticus was having "your hand seized as in an iron grasp, betokening rude health, a warm heart, and distance from the metropolis, but producing a sense of relief when your hand is relieved with the fingers unbroken."—All the Year Round.

Leap Year Presentiions.

A THIRD young man was visiting a beautiful and accomplished young woman on Peoria street last evening, when after a pause, she said, looking at him closely:

"Now, I want to propose to you—"

"You are very kind," said the timid young man between gasps and blushes, "but I am not worthy of so much happiness, and in fact none of our family are marrying people, besides my income is limited, and I have to meet Mr. Moody, and I'm afraid it'll be late. Then without waiting to put on his overcoat he tried to make his exit through the door of a cupboard. "Why," said the young woman, lifting her eyebrows in surprise, "I wanted you to escort me to my sister's on Adams street." "O," in that case," answered her swain. "I'm your friend's level and your best is on the other foot, I shall be only too happy; but I was afraid—that is, I almost dared to hope—in fine, I am subject to these seizures," and he was down on the cold scuttle, and said it was a very cold day; hadn't seen such weather since the Fourth of July.—Chicago Prairie.

Sagacious Canines.

THE instinct of a dog, says the Green Bay (Wis.) State Gazette, in many cases almost equals the reasoning powers of some human beings, especially where some bit of cunning is required to be performed. This fact was palpably exemplified on yesterday. A large dog, belonging to one of our citizens, and who usually accompanies his master to market, is the capacity of porter, was intrusted with a fine steak, securely wrapped in paper, to carry home. The animal grasped the parcel between his teeth, and trotted homeward beside his master. A short distance from the butcher's the gentleman entered another store, leaving the dog, with the parcel, standing on the sidewalk. Shortly two vagabond-looking curs approached the spot, and began sniffing about. Finally the larger of the two curs began growling and barking at the guardian of the steak, who stood with a sort of thing for some time in a calm and dignified manner, till finally, his bullying tormentors probably having applied some opprobrious epithet to him, he opened his mouth to reply, and of course dropped the steak upon the ground. The vagabond cur retreated, and the other dog, now fully exasperated, set off in pursuit of them. In an instant vagabond cur No. 2, who had been standing off a short distance, apparently a silent spectator of the scene, sprang forward and secured the steak in his mouth, and put off in the opposite direction. Now, just here is the pith of what was first remarked. In an alley, not far from the scene of this little episode, were two curs holding a high festival over a rich, juicy steak, and those two curs were the identical curs engaged in the transaction previously related. Who can say that this was not a put-up job between those two outcasts of canine society?

Men in the Prime of Life.

THE venerable Peter Cooper, who was born in 1791, and, is now consequently eighty-five years of age, delivered a speech at a public meeting, a few evenings ago, in the Institute which he founded. William Cullen Bryant who was born in 1794, and is now in the eighty-second year of his age, also made a public speech. Then another ancient citizen John A Dix now seventy-seven years old, made a speech in one of the Fifth Avenue churches. All of these old gentlemen seemed to be in sound condition, physically and mentally, each of them evidently feeling no great interest in public questions. Mr. Bryant spoke in behalf of a philanthropic society; Gen. Dix in advocacy of certain political and social changes; and Mr. Cooper, as well as his financial views at a workingmen's meeting. Mr. Bryant, famous as a poet in his young, still writes fresh and vigorous prose, powerful as an editor, yet writes powerful editorials; and within seven years he has won a new place for himself among the translators of Homer. Mr. Cooper has been, and still is, a successful business man and manufacturer; but the chief honors of his old age have come from his labors to advance popular intelligence and the welfare of the working masses. Mr. Dix, as a politician and public functionary, has held many offices, and was military officer, with the rank of Major General in the war, was assigned to sundry duties at several points, and in different cities. They are all rich men, these three aged citizens, and of course the accounts are correct which place Mr. Bryant and Mr. Cooper among our millionaires. We hope that they may enjoy their wealth, and that they find it advantageous as they pass along. Those people who are but half a century old, must feel pleased at the liveliness of men who are so much their seniors, and must like to see them delivering public speeches. Even a man on the verge of sixty may yet indulge the hope of appearing as a public speaker at the public meetings of the twentieth century, if he think he will live to be as old as Peter Cooper or William Cullen Bryant, and can keep his mind as fresh as theirs. People who are unsound in wind and limb ought to be at these fruitless prime between forty and seventy.—N. Y. Sun.

A Strange Claim.

ONE of the strangest claims pending before Congress is that presented in the petition filed in the Senate by the children of the late Senator Wm. K Sebastian, who was re-elected to his seat from the State of Arkansas for the term beginning March 4, 1859, but was prevented from qualifying by a resolution of expulsion passed by the special session of Congress which was called in July, immediately after the breaking out of the war. The resolution was passed July 11 that ratified, that whereas certain Senators, among whom Sebastian was named, had failed to appear in their seats, and it became apparent that they were engaged in the conspiracy to destroy the Union, they were declared expelled. The petitioners aver that Sebastian was then a Union man and remained such until his death in May, 1865, and they ask the revocation of the resolution of expulsion and the declaration that his legal rights that it, the salaries for the term to which he was elected, inure to his heirs. With the petition are a number of affidavits from various people testifying to the loyalty of Mr Sebastian.—Washington Dispatch to St. Louis Republican.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

THE best treatment for slight burns is said to be to apply cotton batting soaked with a liniment made of equal parts of linseed oil and lime water. Be careful not to break the blisters, should any form.

HOW TO GROW FAT.—It is said that a pint of milk, taken every night just before retiring to rest will soon make the thinnest figure plump. Here is a simple and pleasant means by which thin, scraggy women may acquire plump, rounded figures.

TO PREVENT the skin discoloring after a bruise, take a little dry starch or arrowroot, merely moisten it with cold water, and place it on the injured part. This latest done immediately, so as to prevent the action of the air upon the skin. Invaluable for black eyes.

TO REMOVE COAL OIL FROM DRY GOODS AND CARPETS.—Cover the spot with fine, dry powdered chalk, lay a paper over it and rub it over with a moderately heated iron; two or three applications are all that is necessary. Care should be taken. Strong lye will often effect the same purpose.—Western Rural.

WHAT is said to be a good dentifrice—barely soft and advertised. Make of a half drachm Castile soap, dissolved in one ounce alcohol, three-fourths of an ounce of water and a quarter of an ounce of glycerine. This is colored with cochineal and flavored with peppermint, wintergreen and cinnamon. The powder of this accompanies each bottle is a mixture of precipitated chalk, powdered orris root and carbonate of magnesia.

MOLASSES PUDDING.—Four cupfuls of flour, six eggs, tea and a half cupfuls of molasses, one and a half cupfuls of butter, or butter and lard mixed, one cupful of buttermilk or sour cream, and a teaspoonful of soda. Season to your taste with cinnamon, ginger or cloves, and eat with tart boiled molasses as a sauce, or else cold molasses prepared by adding a small pinch of soda and stirring until it froths up well; it may be made more palatable by the addition of lemon or nutmeg as flavoring.

BRINE FOR SOUSE.—Five quarts of water and one quart of vinegar to one quart of salt. The salt is to be entirely dissolved in the liquor and the mixture strained from every impurity. If this quantity is not sufficient to cover your supply of sousc add more, taking care to preserve the same proportions. Be careful to keep the sousc entirely covered by the brine, else it will soon become sour and then spoil. Weights may easily be contrived for the purpose.—Harper's Bazar.

TO PREVENT flat irons from rusting, melt one-fourth ounce camphor and one-half pound fresh hog's lard over a slow fire, take off the scum, and mix as much black lead with the composition as will bring it to the consistency of cream. Lay over the articles for which it is intended. Let it lie for twenty-four hours, and then rub it well with a dry linen cloth. To smear the irons over with melted suet, and dust thereon sugar-pounded mustard and lime from a smaller bag. Cover the irons with baize in a dry place when not in use.—Scientific American.

Farmers' Gardens.

THE reason why there are so many weedy, worthless gardens is, that they are not properly laid out. We pop one site from here, and another from there, as it may fall, will suffice us to the thanks at many a farmer's wife. The chief trouble with gardens is, that they are so-laid out and planted that all the cultivation must be done by hand. In the busy season, which is all summer, the farmer don't feel like pulling off his coat and going into the garden, low in hand, battling with the weeds and hard ground, and the garden becomes neglected and gets worse and worse, daily. Then it takes altogether too much time to keep the garden cultivated by hand, and no wonder there is such a general aversion among farmers to garden work. They always have excuses when the wife wants hoeing done in the garden.

Now, we propose a plan to save all this hand work, for we know that it is not only generally done, but unfortunate for it horse work.

Our plan is this: Select your garden plot, whether it be a quarter of an acre, half an acre or an acre or land, if longer than wide so much the better. Manure it thoroughly in winter, and break it up deeply as early in spring as possible. When the time for planting arrives use a cultivator or harrow, beginning on one side and proceeding from end to end. Fit and prepare what ground you want to plant in potatoes, cabbages, corn, carrots, parsnips, beets, onions, etc., in the best manner. Now stretch a line from one end to the other of the garden, and plant out in rows about three feet apart whatever you want to raise, and in a week or two more make another planting of what you want in garden, and so keep on planting till June, so as to keep up a succession of vegetables that will be fresh and fine for the table. The ground can be gone over with the cultivator before each planting, the weeds destroyed, and thus it can be got in the best condition for the seeds. By this system garden beds are done away with, and everything is cultivated by horse power, even to lettice, radishes, etc. Such vegetables can be planted in rows, except that two or three rows can be planted instead of one. If desired, six inches apart—still allowing the cultivation to be done by the horse and cultivator.

NOW, what is the result? It is this: A man or boy can go into the garden, and in an hour or two give a thorough cultivation to the whole garden. The ground can be worked deep and be thoroughly pulverized, and the vegetables be kept up to the highest state of growth, and be under and crisp instead of tough and stringy, when but little cultivation is given. It is true, by this plan some hand hoeing will be needed, but at least nine-tenths of that is saved. This is the true plan of managing gardens. All of our market gardens near our large towns and cities are carried on in the same way, and the amount of vegetables they raise is enormous. They could not afford to raise them by hand labor.

If the readers of the Rural World will adopt this system of cultivating their gardens, they will say at the close of the year that the suggestions were worth much more than the subscription price of the year.—Colman's Rural World.

Driving Horses.

THERE are many ways of driving horses, and we think, as we see the vast army of drivers on the street every day, that it is a wonder there are not more balky horses than there are. The true way to drive is to let the horse drive himself, the driver doing little but directing him and giving him that confidence which a horse always gets in himself when he feels that a guide and friend is back of him. The most vicious and incorrigible style of driving is that which so many drivers adopt, by-and-by wrapping the lines around their hands, and pulling the horse back hard with all their might and main, so that the horse, in pain of fact, feels the weight back of him with his mouth, and not with his breast and shoulders. This they do under the impression that such a bold pull is needed in order to "steady" the horse. The fact is, with rare exceptions, there should never be any pull upon the horse at all. A steady pressure is allowable, probably advisable, but any thing beyond this has no justification in nature or reason. For nature suggests the utmost freedom of the action of the head, body and limbs, in order that the animal may attain the highest possible rate of speed. In speeding a horse the lines need seldom be grasped in both hands when the road is straight and free from obstructions.—Prairie Farmer.

Exterminating the Bark Louse on Apple Trees.

THIS pest of young apple trees is so numerous on many young trees that the bark is almost covered. It is known by the common name of "oyster shaped bark louse." By entomologists it is denominated the Coccus conchiformis or conchyliformis meaning shell shaped. These scales contain germs of the females, which die after depositing their eggs. The eggs, which may be seen by carefully lifting the scale, are located in the former part of the growing season. The young insects are very minute. They move about for some days and then settle down and insert their proboscis or sucker into the bark from which they derive their sustenance and acquire their hard coat or shell. The females never leave the shell, but the males emerge from it as small flies and have wings. These being, in brief, the habits of the insect, it is evident that they can only be successfully destroyed soon after they are hatched, and before they acquire their hard and impervious scales. One of the most effectual remedies for exterminating this enemy of apple trees consists in the use of two parts of soft soap, with eight of water, to which lime enough is added to bring the mixture to the consistence of whitewash. This is sprinkled over the trees, covering every limb and twig. We have in mind an orchardist who trims the trees thoroughly and then applies with a paint brush a mixture made by boiling lean tobacco with strong lye, until it is reduced one-half, and then mixing enough soft soap, which is applied to the apple trees. Another ones a decoction of tobacco, aloes and soft soap, applied with a syringe. Prof. Glover, of the Agricultural Department at Washington, informs us that he successful in destroying a similar insect pest on the orange trees in Florida by syringing them with a wash of soft soap, water and a little guano. This insect has varied by hand, and no wonder there is such a general aversion among farmers to garden work. They always have excuses when the wife wants hoeing done in the garden.

Now, we propose a plan to save all this hand work, for we know that it is not only generally done, but unfortunate for it horse work.

Our plan is this: Select your garden plot, whether it be a quarter of an acre, half an acre or an acre or land, if longer than wide so much the better. Manure it thoroughly in winter, and break it up deeply as early in spring as possible. When the time for planting arrives use a cultivator or harrow, beginning on one side and proceeding from end to end. Fit and prepare what ground you want to plant in potatoes, cabbages, corn, carrots, parsnips, beets, onions, etc., in the best manner. Now stretch a line from one end to the other of the garden, and plant out in rows about three feet apart whatever you want to raise, and in a week or two more make another planting of what you want in garden, and so keep on planting till June, so as to keep up a succession of vegetables that will be fresh and fine for the table. The ground can be gone over with the cultivator before each planting, the weeds destroyed, and thus it can be got in the best condition for the seeds. By this system garden beds are done away with, and everything is cultivated by horse power, even to lettice, radishes, etc. Such vegetables can be planted in rows, except that two or three rows can be planted instead of one. If desired, six inches apart—still allowing the cultivation to be done by the horse and cultivator.

NOW, what is the result? It is this: A man or boy can go into the garden, and in an hour or two give a thorough cultivation to the whole garden. The ground can be worked deep and be thoroughly pulverized, and the vegetables be kept up to the highest state of growth, and be under and crisp instead of tough and stringy, when but little cultivation is given. It is

THE SILLY YOUNG RABBIT.

THERE was a young rabbit
Who had a bad habit—
Sometimes he would do what his mother forbid,
And one frosty day,
His mother did say,
"My child you must stay in the burrow close hid.
For I hear the dread sounds
Of hunters and hounds,
Who are searching around for rabbits like you.
Should they see but your head,
They would soon shoot you dead,
And the dogs would be off with you quicker than boo!"
But poor, foolish being,
He no one saw seeing,
Leaving out from his burrow to take a short play
He hopped o'er the ground
With many a bound,
And looked round plentiful, as if he would say,
"Do I fear a man?
Now catch me who can!
So like young rabbit ran in a fine apple-tree,
Where, crawling the bark
He thought not to hark
The coming of hunters, so careless was he;
Now, as rabbits are fond
Of bark round or to wood,
A man came along, loading rabbits for dinner;
He saw this boy,
Then raised his big gun:
And there he lay dead, the useless young sinner.

THE BLACK DOUGLAS.

KING EDWARD I of England nearly conquered Scotland. They did not have photographs in those days, but had ex pressive and descriptive names for people of rank, which answered just as well. So Edward was known as "Longshanks." It was from no lack of spirit or energy that he did not quite complete the subjugation of the sturdy Scots. After three-and-thirty years of the hard politics of this world, and on his way to the Holy Land, Edward II., tucked away the belligerent old King's bones among the bones of other old kings in Westminster Abbey, and spent his time in dissipation among his favorites and allowed the resolute Scots to recover Scotland.

Good James, Lord Douglas, was a very wise man in his day. He may not have had long shanks, but he had a very long head, as you shall presently see. He was one of the hardest foes with which the two Edwards had to contend, and his long head greatly aided his powerful foe the second Edward, who, in his single campaign against the Scots, beat at Bannockburn nearly all that his father had gained.

The old Scottish castle of Roxburgh stood near the border, lifting its grim turrets above the Tweed and the Teviot, and commanding a fine view of the country. When the Black Douglas, as Lord James was called, had recovered castle after castle from the English, he decided to gain this stronghold, and determined to accomplish his wish.

But he knew it could be taken only by surprise, and a very silly ruse it must be. He had outwitted the English so many times that they were sharply on the look-out for him.

How could it be done?

He rode his long-legged, and you shall be told.

Near the castle was a gloomy old forest, called Jedburgh. There, just as the first days of spring began to kindle in the sunrise and sunset, and warm the frosty air, the Black Douglas concealed sixty picked men.

In his Sunrise title, and Father's Eve, immediately before the great church festival of Lent, was to be celebrated with a great gush of music and blaze of light and free offerings of wine in the great hall of the castle. The garrison was to have leave for merry-making and indulging in drunken wassail.

The sun had gone down in the red sky, and the long, deep shadow began to fall on Jedburgh woods, the river, the hills and valleys.

An officer's widow had retired from the great hall, where all was preparation for the night festivities, to the high battlements of the castle, in order to quiet her little child and put it to rest. The sentinel, the sun time gone, paced near her. She began to sing

"Hush ye, Hush ye,
Little pet ye,
Hush ye.

She saw some strange objects moving across the level ground in the distance. They greatly puzzled her. They were like nine animals, but they seemed to have four legs.

"What are those queer-looking things yonder?" she asked of the sentinel, as he drew near.

"They are Farmer Asher's cattle," said the soldier, straining his eyes to discern the outlines of the long figures in the shadows. "The good man is making merry to-night, and has forgotten to bring in his oxen; lucky 't will be if they do not fall a prey to the Black Douglas."

So sure was he that the objects were oxen that he ceased to watch them longer.

The woman's eye, however, followed the queer-looking cattle for some time, until they seemed to be almost under the outer works of the castle. Then, feeling quite at ease, she thought she would sing again. Bleak was the evening air; it may have made her feel like singing.

Now the name of the Black Douglas had become so terrible to the English that it proved a bugbear to the children, who, when they misbehaved, were told that the Black Douglas would get them. The little dirty I have quoted must have been very quieting to good children in those alarming times.

So the good woman sang, cheerily:

Hush ye,
Hush ye,
Little pet ye,
Hush ye.

"Is not he aware of that?" said a husky voice close beside her, and a mail-gloved hand fell mighty upon her shoulder. She was dreadfully frightened, for she knew from the appearance of the man he must be the Black Douglas.

The Scots came leaping over the walls. The garrison was sherry-making below, and, almost before the disarmed revelers had my warning, the Black Douglas was in the midst of them. The old strong-hold was taken, and many of the garrison were put to the sword; but the Black Douglas spared the woman and the child, who probably never afterward felt quite so sure about the little ditty:

Hush ye,
Hush ye,
Do not thee pet ye;
The Black Douglas
Shall not get ye.

It is never well to be too sure you know.

Douglas had caused his picked men to approach the castle by walking on their hands and knees, with long black cloaks thrown over their bodies, and their ladders and weapons concealed under their cloaks. The nine [illegible] were very nearly the appearance of a herd of cattle in the deep shadows, and completely deceived his sentinel, who was probably thinking more of the music and dancing below than of the watchful enemy who had been haunting the gloomy woods of Jedburgh.

The Black Douglas, or "Good James, Lord Douglas" as he was called by the Scots, fought, as I have already said, with King Robert Bruce at Bannockburn. One lovely June day, in the first year of 1329, King Robert lay dying. He called Douglas to his bedside and told him that it had been one of the dearest wishes of his heart to go to the Holy Land and recover Jerusalem from the infidels, but since he could not go, he wished him to embalm his heart after his death and carry it to the holy city and deposit it in the holy sepulchre.

Douglas had the heart of Bruce embalmed and inclosed in a silver case and wore it on a silver chain about his neck He set out for Jerusalem, but received first to visit Spain and engage in the war waged against the Moorish King of Grenada. He fell in Andalusia in battle. Just before his death, in Westminster Abbey, and spent his time in dissipation among his favorites and allowed the resolute Scots to recover Scotland.

Good James, Lord Douglas, was a very wise man in his day. He may not have had long shanks, but he had a very long head, as you shall presently see. "Why?"

"You must not go in there!" said an old dog to a young pup who stood on the white steps of a large house. "You must stay out now."

"Why?" asked the young pup. For it was a trick (and a bad trick) of his house.

"Why?" when he was told he must not go in.

"Why!" said the old dog, "I cannot say why. Old as I am, I do not know why. But I do know, that if you go in there it is a day like this, the man will drive you out."

"But why?" went on the pup. "It is not fair. There is no sense in it. I have been in the house some days, and no one turned me out; so why should they now?"

"Those were fine, sunny days," said the old dog

"But it is on the wet days that I most want to be in the house," said the pup. "And I don't see why I should stay out. So here I go."

And so he did: but he soon found that, though no one stopped to tell him "why" he had to stay out. It was quite true that he might not. The first who saw him was the cook, who had a broom in her hand.

"That vile pup!" cried she. "Look at his feet."

"What is wrong with my feet?" barked the pup.

But she did not wait to tell him. She struck him with the broom; and he fled with a howl to his mat.

"Oh, that pup!" cried the maid, as she saw the marks of his feet. "He ought not to come into the house at all, if he will not keep out on wet days."

"But why?" yelped the pup, as the maid threw a heath-brush at his head.

Still no one told him why. Such a sin just then came up the stairs. "Why, what a mess!" he said. "Oh, I see, it is that pup. I thought he knew he must not come in!"

"So I did; but I did not know why," growled the pup, as with sore back and lame foot he crept under a chair.

"Come out, come out!" cried the man "I will not have you in the house at all. Out with your!" And he beat him with a strong hand and chained him in a stall.

"You might have stopped out, and played on the grass, if you had staid there," the man said. "But as you will come into the house when you ought not to, you must be kept where you cannot do so."

And so the young pup had to stay in the dull stall. And when at last he was let out, he did not ask, "Why?" if he was told to do, or not to do, a thing, but did as he ought at once, like a wise dog.—Nursery for January.

A MATTER in the Journal of [illegible] Mechanics gives the following directions for the treatment of a beseiging, which are worth remembering: "Cinders, ammonia, sodium, bent and a hundred other remedies have been suggested for the removal of them of any special value. If the poisonous bag has not been emptied, remove it with a sharp knife, and then apply cold water, or if sweeten as formed as to grasp the sting itself, without pressing on the bag. Common hair-weavers are just the thing. This must, however, be done very quickly, or it will be of no use. Grasping the bag and sting with the fingers only squeezes the poison out of the bag and into the wound. After the bag has been removed, rank the wound steadily, and apply a poultice of moist mud. We have never found anything better."

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Druggists' Circular, describing a mode of treating sunstroke which he says "I am a negro came to me in intense agony, some unskilled time having got into his eye. That the lives more be unstained by all the hazards I felt certain. I chose sulphuric acid. I put one drachm and a half of the diluted acid in a large ounce graduate, filled it with water, and put him to wash his eye with the liquid. He did as he was told, and was relieved almost instantaneously. Then I made those his eye with pure water and after that I told him to anoint it with olive oil and to combine the application for some days. He was cured in most well, and can see with his eye again. In another similar case, one drachm was immediately applied, and the patient had to be sent for from some little distance, and the negro lost his eye entirely."

Clothes.

WHEN one woman relates to another the history of some eventful turning-point or crisis in her life, it is ten to one if the latter do not interrupt the story by inquiring eagerly: "What did you wear?" Until this question is answered she finds it difficult to fasten her interest with her friend's adventures, or, indeed, to take any particular interest in them whatever.

Doubtless Hebon of Troy never forgot the color of the new dress she wore when she passed for the last time Priam's sight ere leaving him for ever; and Ximon de l'Enclos could have told you the precise fashion in which her hair was dressed on the day the Abbe de Bernis fell in love with her, seventy-two years before her grandmother; or Diana of Poictiers the shape of the dashing riding-hat that shaded her handsome face when Henry saw and loved her so desperately. So that after all the question is true to human nature, and, indeed, the formula, "What did you wear?" or the still more interesting one, "What will you wear?" may be looked upon as the only two certain forms of speech that can be safely reckoned on to proceed out of the mouth of that most uncertain thing, woman; for, be she what she may in other respects, she is neither cold nor indifferent nor fickle to her clothes.

Some one has said that dress forms the delight of one-half of a woman's life, and the torment of the other. There is a grain of truth in the remark, although the originator of it blinked the fact that dress is not entirely her life, it is part and parcel of it as much as the air she breathes—no more to be put away than her third law own individuality, or to be slighted than her own dignity. From the very ermine a woman child is impressed with the importance and responsibility of her "clothes." "Yes, Miss Mary, you may go and play for a little while, but if you tumble your clothes you'll catch it." This exhortation, with variations, has probably been addressed to every well brought-up little girl since the deluge, and will doubtless continue to be fashionable long after we and our great grandchildren have departed this life. The mental struggles of Miss Mary during the process of her early initiation into the sacred rites of the religion of dress are no less grotesque and humorous. A deep sense of depression weighs upon her childish spirits as she sees her brothers fortunate in the possession of jackets and knickerbockers, jumping and racing in an ecstasy of enjoyment, deterred by no such fears of "tumbling" their clothes. Impressed by the solemn injunction she scorns the pinafore as a badge of servitude, and among women of fashion it is next to impossible to be first in richness of clothes for any length of time.

If Miss Mary only knew it, men do but ask to see their mothers, sisters and sweethearts suitably clean and fresh in all their arrangements and appointments, and as pleasing to the eye as modesty and moderate means will allow, and they are most well, and can see with his eye again. In another similar case, one drachm was immediately applied, and the patient had to be sent for from some little distance, and the negro lost his eye entirely."—London World.

Explosive Kerosene.

PROF. W. P TOWNE delivered the first lecture in the course of chemistry at the Maryland Institute last night, taking as his subject "Kerosene," an article of daily use, which has produced more household disasters in Baltimore than almost any other known agent. The object of the lecturer was to show the properties of coal oil, the methods of refining, etc. The professor stated that the result of a test of twenty samples of coal oil, purchased at different places in the city, showed that eleven of the samples were highly dangerous, six unsafe, and three safe. The range of flashing points were 68° to 134°, and the burning point from 60° to 150° Fahrenheit. The highly dangerous were those that will give off inflammable vapors at a very low temperature, and whose burning point is under 110° Fahrenheit. One of these samples had a burning point as low as 68°, which is about ordinary summer temperature. The highest flashing point was 90°. The unsafe samples range from 88° to 96°, flashing point.

In determining the danger Prof. Towne was guided by the temperature of the oil in an ordinary lamp after it had been burning for some time. For this he referred to a series of experiments he determined by Prof. Chandler, of New York, where the highest temperature reached by the oil in a lamp after burning an hour was 128°, and the lowest 76°. The danger of explosion arises from an oil which will give off vapors in the lamp when these vapors become mixed with air. It is not the vapors alone that are explosive, but the mixture of vapor and air. In seventeen of the twenty samples taken from the shops in Baltimore vapor would be given off at the ordinary temperature of the oil in the lamp to rise. Prof. Towne says that there is no reason, except the cupidity of the refiner, why all the kerosene used for illuminating purposes should not be partially safe, provided all the light products are removed in the process of distillation. The result of Prof. Towne's tests shows more conclusively than anything yet offered the highly dangerous nature of kerosene, and should induce the dawn of this new discovery. Rheumatism a Symptom of Other Diseases.

The alarming extent of chronic rheumatism in the country has led to persistent investigation of the cause. It is ascertained that the disease is the result of other complicated diseases of the liver, kidneys, stomach, blood, alimentary, etc., etc. Rheumatism is therefore but a symptom. It is also found that, by the removal of the disease from which the rheumatism originates, as a result which seems to substantiate the fact. When the halls of Congress are converted into a forum for the defence and justification of the late rebellion, and asked a loyal people in condemning a government for the preservation of the Union who sacrifice lives to the magnanimity of the loyal masses, is it not about time for the friends of the Union to stand shoulder to shoulder in guarding the Nation against renewed attacks of the same defeated enemies of the Government?

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experimentation upon the medical properties and power of vegetation, extracts and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world as the result of his experiments, a combination of vegetable extracts, which for the purpose of removing disease unequaled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of those powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable success attending the use of this Ointment in the cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sores in the breast, discovery of the age, and cure for a vital and chronic investigation of the properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural healthy action to the system, to relieve the pain and restore the vigor of the blood. In this it stands a sovereign power to palliate over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of the combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human system, and by its action upon the blood, nerves and tissues, the most wonderful and beneficial results are made manifest in the purifying and healing influence. Hence it ranges in reality his claim to a universal diffusion.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to the parents as well as the child, that the use of no internal remedy has been the cause to indiscriminate of the Speech.

No patient ever need die with this disease when the Magnetic Ointment is at hand.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism, this Ointment is the most remedy ever discovered. Diphtheria is Could Sore Throat in one application.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will relieve pain in the worst cases of Nervous Headache in three minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this ointment is of immense value.

A Great Remedy for the Salve, Rheumatism, Sores, Diseased bone Tumor, Scrofulous Humors, Cramp, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face or Bones, Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Piles of any kind. We do not intend to enumerate on the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment, but say to the afflicted, Try it, Try it, Try it.

THE Petoskey folks had a Leap Year ball on Wednesday evening, which is said to have been a "big thing."

We have the largest and best assorted stock of crockery and glassware in town, Fox, Rose & Buttars.

THE Grand Rapids and Indiana and the Flint and Pere Marquette railroads are to build a union depot at Reed City.

V. ANCHE BUTTARS, accompanied by his daughter Essie, and his sister, Miss Esther Buttars, arrived home Thursday morn from Port Austin.

A soldier of the garrison at Mackinac was lately tried by Court Martial at that place for burglary, and sentenced to the military prison at Albany for two years.

RETURNED.—Some of our acquaintances have bank belonging to us entitled, on their Land." Every person can put in upon its track, or inform us of its whereabouts they will confer a favor.

THE Other Side of the healthome of Maj. Green, on Tuesday evening was a pleasurable affair, as well as being quite profitable to the Ladies Aid Society. Only talk of getting up a "Needlecamp Social" next. These Socials are very happy occasions.

GEN. Irenel Rose, of the Petoskey Democrat, was in town on Tuesday, and started our genial friend on "blue ruler." He has got lots of cheek, but it is of the real innate kind, and a "day window" is rapidly developing under his west. Will he or is his "settler" last fate him upon or what? Echo answers, "pay up subscription."

A lawyer named S. H. Horne, of Grand Rapids, is Ford's counsel in his suit in the U. S. Court, and has expressed himself as very positive of his being able to acquit his client. Now he has got all he can do to acquit himself of the charge of perjury, for which he has been arrested at Grand Rapids. "Birds of a feather flock together.

THE Manistee Advocate (Democratic), and the Traverse Bay Progress, favor H. H. Noble, of Elk Rapids, for Congress from this District. Mr. Noble will undoubtedly be the Democratic nominee, and being deservedly popular in Grand Traverse, will receive a very large vote of the people of this region, regardless of party. But this district has five or six Republican majority, you know.

WHICH HARBOR BILL.—The amount asked for in Representative Hubbell's bill for the improvement of Charlevoix harbor is $40,000. The bill is now in the hands of the Committee on Commerce, and its life or death will be decided in the Committee room. Our case is cast by any means entirely hopeless, but with the proper representation by the proper persons will, we think, bring about favorable action. The ultimate result will not be known until some time in March.

We have made "great reductions" in prices in clothing and over coats in order to make room for a new stock. Fox, Rose & Buttars.

CHEAP ENOUGH.—Rev. F. E. Pierce, of the Methodist Church at Whitmore Lake, in this State, was lately the recipient of a donation of $95, $4.50 of which was realized from kisses bestowed by a party of young ladies on all gentlemen present who were willing to receive them at the rate of 5 cents a piece. Some one at our elbow suggests that the same Society would have refused the proceeds of a dance. Well, dancing is a sin, you know; kissing is not.

FORD'S DEFENDER.—G. F. Schevalde," of Little Traverse, in a communication to the Clam Lake News, comments on that paper's joking statement that the editor of this journal "passed through there on his way to bail out Ford," as follows: "The reason that Smith failed to bail out his enemy was that he (Smith) had all his property transferred to other hands for fear of his libel suits; and this fact being known, the authorities at Grand Rapids would not accept him as one of the bondsmen." Now, whoever "G. F. Schevalde" is, we brand him as an infamous liar, and only fit to defend and associate with such unprincipled and contemptible scoundrels as C. H. Ford. If a five cent nickle would have rescued him from "distance vile," and secured the dismissal of his suit, we should have retained the specie.

JUST received, a large line of 8 cent prints in "plaids, stripes, and figures." The best value for the money ever offered in this town at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

We understand that a weekly newspaper is soon to be started at Palmonia, Missaukee county. It will be Republican in politics, and will advocate and urge the renomination and re-election of the Hon. Jay A. Hubbell, the present Representative of this, the Ninth District, in Congress.

What Was the Survey For.

[Fifth reports say that the words of commerce do not appear [illegible] harbor of refuge.—Ed. Sentinel's Report.]

Was it to investigate this phase of the question that Congress appropriated $500 to survey Charlevoix harbor in 1868 and again in 1873? Did it require a topographical survey of the premises to demonstrate their adaptability to commerce — present and prospective? These questions may seem bold, in the face of the War Department, and its Engineers, but we answer them negatively. The geography of the Lakes and a chart of the coast is sufficient to solve the question, and refute the peremptory judgement which serves as the text of this article.

If the existence of natural harbors at other points on Lake Michigan, which the Engineers are pleased to speak of as "closely contiguous" constituted the sole reason for this opinion, why should a topographical examination be necessary to sustain it?

The authority which ordered the survey had a full understanding of the wants of commerce at this point; therefore we consider this clause in the first report a purchased or thoughtless mistake, and fraternal consideration and professional pride the policies which sustain it through two succeeding statesmens. Perhaps from the opposite standpoint the supplementary course may seem commendable, but this does not lessen the injustice to ourcause We venture this much as our opinion of the proposition under consideration, before we apply the test to its truthfulness or consistency.

If the statement be true, why should the Government expend $200,000 to make a harbor of refuge at Frankfort, and not locate [illegible] Manitou harbor at the north and Manistee at the south should have been considered when that survey was made. With a natural harbor within one mile of Charlevoix, why should commerce have greater need of an artificial harbor three miles to the at Charlevoix, where the nearest harbor is twenty miles distant, and that extremely difficult of ingress and egress during the prevalence of storms from directions most dangerous to commerce and human lives.

In a vain attempt to enter Little Traverse harbor for refuge last fall, the schooner Pontiac was lowshed and lost her cargo. Had an accessible harbor existed at Charlevoix this loss would have been saved commerce.

In 1867 the steamer Shenandoa was wrecked at the mouth of Pine River, and her timbers to this day line the beach, giving the lie to the extract which heads this article.

The fall of 1874 the schooner Morse was boarded within five miles of this place, and $9,000 was expended in releasing her and repairing damages. Had the chart pointed out an accessible harbor here would it have occurred?

In November, 1871, the schooner Firebrand, with canvass gone, in one of the worst gales on record, as a last resort, let go both anchors within a stone's throw of Pine River. There she hung during the terrific gale for eight days, her commander and our citizens mostly expecting to see her cables part or her anchors drag, and the vessel and her crew lost upon the rocks. Strong cables and the desire of a rock formation safely saved a disaster, but had a harbor existed here no risk need have been taken.

Mariners of experience tell us that in areas of weather they could make this harbor more readily and with less danger, than at any of the harbors in this locality. And, arguing from the hypothesis that "time is money," the valuable time that would be saved to distressed lake craft in this vicinity, would go far toward the expense necessary to make a harbor here.

Therefore we think Col. Mansfield's statement, above quoted, has no substantial argument to sustain it, and may be easily disposed of by our friends at Washington if they unite their strength and exercise it to that end. And we believe they will.

We understand that Mr. Wm. H. Fife, of Vans, will remove to Salem, Ohio, about the first of April. He has rented quite a large farm there and will stock it with cows and engage in the milk business. He has not sold his farm at Vans, but rented it for a term of years. —Herald.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Vitalizating the Almanac--Tooth-Tinkering--Sweet Charity.

The Cooks' Ball--"Tramp Tramp!"--Rose Michel.

New Books.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Feb. 10, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL:—

It's on at last, all we want of it. The cabs this morning are low and overloaded, and drawn by sour steaming horses. Pedestrians look like Santa Clauses or like Arctic explorers at the very least. The leafless branches are heavy with a clinging mass, and those round brown sassy sparrows eternally hopping about Union Square look like so many flies in a pan of milk. Thousands of men and boys who for months have been slinking idly about the streets have suddenly straightened up, put on an air of importance, and, armed with all conceivable weapons, shovels, brooms boards, and even shutters, are at this moment manfully fighting the enemy out into the gutters. The sleighbells jingle expectantly from their nails on the stable walls—the snow has come and the shame of the Winter is taken away.

Not everybody likes snow for its own sake, but I guess few are sorry to see the fleecy masses which tardily prove the correctness of the almanac—for really the joke was being carried almost too far, and a precedent being set for eccentricities on the part of the weather clerk which, if allowed to continue, might eventually damage this old globe in which, as our only support until we become ghosts, we naturally feel considerable interest. We also read this morning that the ice harvest has begun up the river, so that the dreadful scarcity of "cook-tail timber" next summer will probably be avoided.

The annual Charity Ball, under the auspices of the ladies of New York, came off on Tuesday evening at the Academy of Music, and in spite of hard times was one of the most brilliant and successful since the inauguration of the series. The ball decorations were elegant, but according to the rules of the Association, severely simple. In the matter of dresses and jewelry, however, no such restrictions exist, and the well-filled floor was absolutely dazzling the whole night through. The Committee of Management, numbering over two hundred, comprising the cream of society, and the guests included well-nigh everyone of any social importance from Mayor Wickham down. The proceeds, which must be exceptionally large, will afford, timely aid to the poor in the increasing severity of the weather.

On the succeeding evening occurred another entertainment which although pitched at a lower key, socially speaking, was hardly less note-worthy. This was the tenth annual ball of the French Cooks, on the banquet tables of which were displayed marvels of their professional skill which went far to establish the claim of cookery to a place among the fine arts. Among the table ornaments were a vase of richly colored flowers, so delicate that they trembled on their stems, and formed entirely of sugar, an admirably modelled statue of "Greece," four feet in height, and made of appropriate materials, a group of "Washington and his generals" in ice cream, and a pastry clarion occupied by two jobbers, and drawn by magnificent swans made of whipped lard, sailing over tossing waves of parsley and mashed potato. The architects of these wonderful designs were the chief cooks of our prominent hotels.

The full text of Mr. Morrison's new Tariff Bill has appeared, together with the comments of various prominent New York merchants and importers, interviewed for the purpose. The weight of their testimony is, that the bill is well considered and commendable, and that its effect would be to both simplify the importing business, and to stimulate American manufactures. The opinion that it will pass the House also prevails.

A startling, but extraordinary improbable story is the one which now reaches us from Washington, to the effect that it is the Spaniards themselves, who keep the Cuban insurgents supplied with arms, etc, in order to prolong the insurrection, and prevent the abolition of slavery.

It is difficult for the average intellect to comprehend how the prolongation of a hopeless conflict could effect the desired result, and besides, the selling of the belligerents, if acting it be, is almost too natural.

That new animal whose existence in one form or another has long been known, but whose classification has but recently been accomplished by the creation of the name "tramp," has become alarmly numerous, and is reaching a high degree of development. Thraperlas as commonly met with in the rural districts, seem to be a cross between the pig, the sloth, and the wolf. That there is also a little of the fox blood, in certain individuals at least, is shown by their late performance in Washington, where five of them were arrested for stepping up to the doors of Congress, calling out individual members and by representing themselves as hard up constituents, endeavoring to extract small loans from our national legislators. If this sort of development goes on, and there is any reliance to be placed on Darwin, who knows but this strange lilpad may "evolute" into man, with whom this last exploit would indicate its close connection."

The Titiens Opera season has proved a great success. Nilson herself hardly drew larger or more enthusiastic audiences, and the Academy on an opera night has been a sight to gladden the managerial eyes and warm the managerial heart. The prima donna whose concert performances were rather coldly prized by the newspaper critics a few weeks since, has fairly taken those gentry off their feet by her remittous use of opera, and warmed their pens into writing liquidly effervescent but dramatic force.

Aside from the opera the leading amusements remain the same, with no immediate prospect of change. "Rose Michel," which proves itself one of the successes of the decade, is running with unabated attendance at the Union Square, whose manager, Messrs. Shook & Palmer, show their appreciation of popular favor by increasing the strength and attractiveness of the play. The force created by this remarkable work tempted the publishers of the N. Y. Weekly to lay violent hands upon the story and make thereof a serial for their publication. Messrs. Shook & Palmer, who own the exclusive right to the work, have enjoined its further publication.

The Grand Conservatory of Music, under the direction of Mr. Ernest Eberhard, has grown wonderfully in popular favor. Its entertainments every Wednesday evening, are now considered the most classical of any series given in the city, and are well worthy the attention they receive.

Miss Yonge's new book, "My Aleidos," published by Macmillan & Co., is just out, and is the strongest novel of the year so far.

"Mrs. Limber's Ruffle," published by the Appletons, is a bright, sharp little story aimed at lotteries in general, and church fair raffles in particular. Its moral, while well sugar-coated, is very evident.

It seems that the United States has not got a monopoly of the Barnum genius. A dispatch from Berlin informs us that an enterprising adventurer has secured the clock-work of Tennessee's dynamite infernal machine, and proposes to display its horrors among the fly gobbling constituency of rural Germany, at 10 many groschen per head. It looks as though a Yankee occasionally got born in some foreign country by mistake.

MICHIGAN'S FAVORITE PAPER.

The Detroit Tribune.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1876

THE DETROIT TRIBUNE will enter upon the new year thoroughly equipped in all departments and fully occupied in every field of newspaper enterprise, notwithstanding the changes in the editorial corps of the paper. The editorial conduct of the paper will remain under the same able management that has made it the leading Republican journal of the State, and its columns will be open, as heretofore, to every public spirited citizen, without regard to party lines, and to intelligent discussion of all questions of public importance. The leading news and correspondence features of the paper will be maintained with unabated vigor, and will include such special features as will secure to its readers the earliest and most reliable information, and the best digest and comprehensive review of the news of the day. THE DETROIT TRIBUNE business department, acknowledging no rivals in the State, and has few equals in the country.

The Tribune's Presidential campaign will be the most thoroughly organized campaign that has been fought since the re-generation of the Republican party. The Democratic party, long and grievously misruled in many States, and now in the utterly anomalous field, will embrace many desperate and ill-considered struggles to get control of the National Government. Believing that the success of such organization would be a national calamity, THE TRIBUNE will spare no energy or means to promote reform movements in all wards. Maintaining its distinctive party lines, and loyal to the Republican party for the general welfare, and holding party organization as simply an agency necessary to carry them into effect in the administration of government, it gives to the Republican party its independent and hearty, but never blind and dishonored, support. Faults of policy and abuses in administration it will not be slow to point out and strive to have removed, as the best way to guard the people while he holds served. It will labor unceasingly such a public sentiment, and to diffuse such general information, on all questions of practical importance, and lead in a grand and glorious Republican triumph, with which fidelity to entire union the second hundred years of the life of the Republic.

In the News department of THE TRIBUNE will exist, more freely, as heretofore, of telegraphic facilities and special correspondents, for the purpose of giving the earliest and most reliable news in the most attractive and readable form. Its commissioner at Michigan news, largely gathered by its own paid correspondents, far surpasses in variety, and extent that furnished by any other District paper.

Its AGRICULTURAL Department has only limitations—nothing equal to it. Its value is given in its voluminous correspondence from particular farmers and their wives, who make it their medium for exchanging views and intelligence.

Its COMMERCIAL department endeavors market reports that cannot be excelled for accuracy prepared with the greatest labor and pains, so that they can be implicitly relied on.

Its stories, poetry and miscellany are all selected with the greatest care, and from the best attainable sources, the design being to have THE TRIBUNE a model home, enjoyable and useful visitor in every home.

In short we aim to make

as money, long experience, practical skill, a pride in the work, and untiring zeal can possibly produce. Thus THE TRIBUNE will continue to solidify all rivals in the enterprise and excellence of its various editions, as fatigued there shall be no doubt about.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE it should be borne in mind is the LARGEST weekly paper in the State, being EIGHT COLUMNS larger than any of the other Detroit papers, thus furnishing every week more reading matter. It is carefully edited, and, altogether, has no equal anywhere in the West, in point of real value and general attractiveness in all its departments. It will be kept fully up to its previous standard, which has given it an immensely wider circulation throughout Michigan than any other paper published either within or without our borders. There is probably not a school district in the State where THE TRIBUNE is not to be found.

The prices of THE TRIBUNE in its various editions is as follows: Daily, $10.00 per year, including postage; $5.50 for six months; 2.65 for three months. Tri-Weekly, $5 30 per year, including postage; $2 55 for six months; $1 35 for three months. Weekly, $2 per year for single subscriptions; $1 80 in clubs of five; $1 75 in clubs of ten; $1 60 in clubs of twenty—all these prices including postage, which we have to pay. A large and elegant map of Michigan (finest pertaining to all ready to hang upon the wall, is also given to every subscriber to THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE for 30 cents extra. This offer is made as an inducement to new subscribers and for renewals, as its price to anyone not a subscriber, is $1 50. Address all letters to

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments in the medicinal properties and power of vegetables, minerals and animals, and in the combining, mixing and combining compounds of the world, as the results of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable and Mineral Magnetism, the power of which in properties is confined to the animals of Medicine. His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended the application in the cure of diseases, stamps it at once as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its virtues.

It never fails, while these remains sufficient vitality in the system for the healthy reaction of the nervous energies of the body, and causes a corresponding reaction against the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained by any other remedial agent.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the system, and wherever the nerves extend, there it carries its healing influence. Every nerve is reached and made sensible of its position and healthy action. Hence it cures as readily with internal as external diseases.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to persons so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. In fact, in no case has it failed.

No sufferer ever used die with this Ointment where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most compete remedy ever prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In twenty-nine cases out of 5 cases it has effected entire relief in the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this ointment is of immense value.

For Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Ulcerated sore throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Whooping Cough, Asthma, Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Earache, Toothache, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Piles, Chilblains, Frost Bites, Chapped Hands, Sore Nipples, Chafing, Stings of Insects, Poisoned Wounds, Mosquito Bites, Chronic Sore Throat, Sore Feet, Corns and all Bowel Complaints.

NEARLY all the iron mills at Troy, N. Y., are now at work, and the condition of the poorer class in the lower part of the city compared much better than it was last year at this time.

During 1875 there were received in New York 462,371 beeves, 5,080 cows, 118,789 calves, 1,232,984 sheep, 1,386,514 swine—lieef averaged for the year $11.12 per 100 lbs dressed; sheep, 46.54 five weight, cows fed large, lbs, $7.76 per 100 lbs on weight.

THE American Bridge Company of Chicago have contracted to build the proposed bridge across the Hudson River at Poughkeepsie. With approaches it will be a mile long, with longer spans (525 feet each) than any now used, and to cost from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000.

A PATENT that will burn on or under water has been made, which will be of considerable use at sea. A small box, weighted at one end, and ending in a small copper wire at the top, is filled with phosphide of calcium. When thrown overboard, it stands upright in the water, and on removing the rich water penetrates the box and the phosphuretted hydrogen escapes through a perforated tube in a brilliant jet of light.

A WOMAN in the American Asylum notices an interesting instance of mildness in geese in the hawk moth (Sphinx). While watching the sudden imbedding of the fingers of the Cyclops Tweedledum she observed that the hawk moths never varied the same flower tuber, even when frightened away by some motion made by the observer. On returning, they would generally go to the flowers they had opened during their absence or that had not been visited since their flight.

THE Union Straw Works at Foxboro, Mass., will soon be sold at Sheriff's sale. These works have been in existence more than twenty years, and are by far the largest of the kind in the United States, their production averaging 20,000 hats a day. One-third of all the straw goods manufactured in the country are the product of these works, and in the busy season they give employment to over 2,500 sewing girls. The bidding promises to be spirited, as there is a trade between straw goods men to obtain possession of their property.

THE streets of London now on average gave launch of 2,500 miles of gas mains, and upwards of 54,000 private lamps, which consume annually 1,000,000,000 cubic feet of gas 3 year, or about 3,000,000 a day. The gas supply of the entire metropolis is about 11,000,000,000 cubic feet per year, or 30,000,000 cubic feet a day, requiring for its production the coking of 1,750,000 tons of coal—and about one-half the coal is reported to be $8,750,000. The value of the residual products, such as coke, tar, and ammonia liquor is as much as $4,500,000. The gas rental of the city is $17,000,000, of which $1,250,000 goes for street lamps.

THE new States—Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, South Carolina, and West Virginia—took a census in 1875, which shows the following increase over the Federal census of 1870: Iowa, 196,704; Kansas, 148,924, Louisiana, 130,124, Massachusetts, 194,551; Michigan, 159,-782; Minnesota, 108,226; Nevada, 9,787; New Jersey, 120,496; New York, 352,146; Rhode Island, 40,896; South Carolina, 217,381; Wisconsin, 186,969—total in crease, 1,587,174 In 1870 these States had nearly one-third the population of the whole country, and, if we may estimate from the ratio of population in the remaining States has been proportionate, the centennial population of the country ought to be about 41,000,000.

How Jones Shaved Himself.

In view of the hard times Jones determined to shave himself. His income had been reduced and he had got tired of waiting for his turn, of being pestered to purchase toilet articles, of the president and unnecessary hushing by the barber's boy; and the steady evaporation of his small change. So Jones invested in the requisite apparatus, and upon bringing them home remarked triumphantly to Mrs. Jones that he was glad to have had the opportunity of setting the example of economy On Sunday morning Jones commenced operations, and it was not long before a large part of the household was enlisted in his service. Mrs. Jones must first heat a cup for soap, Miss Jones must hunt up some shaving paper, Master Jones must find a hook for his strop, and the servant must scour off the same. Offering Jones had a new razor, and new razors proverbially need to be sharpened, and Jones undertook to sharpen it. First he tried the old strop, and rubbed a la for until he had used up a large part of the blade and left a leather edge as rough as the burr on a file. Then came the stropping process, and Jones rubbed diligently half an hour alternately on You one, two, three and four, at the end of which time his blade seemed to be about where he started, and he mentally wondered how the barbers managed to do it so quickly. He had seen them slash away with a razor and bring it to a keen edge in a few vigorous strokes He had vainly been in deavoring to do the thing with precision and deliberation. But it was no go. All sorts of reasons occurred to him, for he had a bad razor; perhaps the strop was bad; perhaps he had too much oil on; not enough—in short all sorts of reasons, but the right one didn't strike him. Jones knew no more about sharpening a razor than a cow. But Mrs. Jones was looking on, and Jones did not dare admit that he couldn't do it. So he finally said, "There" with a triumphant air, as if he had finally got it all right. Jones said "there" and squared himself for action. His beard was stiff and stubborn, and if the razor had been a sl ally sharp he could have cut it easily. But the razor wasn't sharp, and slid over the stubble like a sled over the snow Mrs Jones tittered, and Jones resolved to brave it out. So he seized the strop and made a desperate lunge—as the barbers do—intending to get an edge with one skil swoop, but the first stroke cut the leather a fearful gash, the second slashed the strop in two, and the third closed the razor over his hand enjoining an amount of red meat that made Mrs. Jones scream. "Oh, that's nothing," said Jones, "only a scratch;" and he tied up his hand with a towel. "Just a little slip, my dear," and Jones again seized the razor, lathered his eyes, nose and ears full of soap and started to mow down his crop. This time he managed to cut a little hair off, but it came hard and brought the tears to his eyes. It was like tearing the hair up by the roots. But Jones, nothing daunted, kept on bravely. He took it at different angles; he stippled frequent lather. He scraped and scraped until the cuticle had been excoriated to the consistency of loaf lieen sacerated to the consistency of a raw beefsteak. "There, my dear," he said to Mrs. J., "not too smooth that is," and he tried to delude Mrs. J. into thinking the right way. But Mrs. J., with glaring and reckless obstinacy, persisted in rubbing the wrong way, and said she didn't think It was very smooth Then Jones grew desperate, but said that perhaps there were a few hairs not quite off, and as they should be. So he went at it again. This time he was savage, and as was ever Hamlet before Elsinore, waiting for his father's shade. It came. This time he palpably drew. The hair dore not even bend, but pierced and a white-clad figure started forth. Brave ghost! Unfortunate lenuer. The assistant had forgotten to call his plaid to bed with him. The spirit walked or rather glided in the center of the floor, turned about, and although the front was somewhat obscured by the night dress, the figure rushed on it—a cross between the ghost walked for a purpose. And he was not wrong. At last one night, when, after the witching hour, the shade took his appearance, to peep out to a hand in the floor and disappeared. The lion seized on the former's mind, might be not find the cause of the fright's perturbation and let him rest. In the morning he arose and took up the board, and found a small box with some sanger bottles in it A sandy looking paper had some words traced on it thus: "I am the ghost of the Englishman. My family poisoned me! I haunt this house until they are found and the law executed."

This was too much for the farmer In the first place he hadn't known "the Englishman;" his family might be in Guinea, for all he knew, and even if they were caught and the crime proven, it is mighty hard to convict on theseday, and especially hard to hang anybody. Life was too short. It was cheaper to vacate and give the ghost his apartments. He did so, left the farm and the house, and in the spring will go on mother less ghostly plane.

Sequel—The "ghost" is well fixed. He was a healthy antidote man, who, liking the farm, and the advantages, concluded to get his neighbor out at all hazards. The idea struck him, and he accepted it He fastened in the wall near the window of the bedroom an empty bottle which the sighing sounds when the wind blew. He climbed to the attic by a ladder, and came down the stairs, opening the doors—only two—as he came. Then again crossing the room when he did not make his appearance, was produced by a contrivance, which consisted under the lower window sash a key which was in the handle of the confederate. No carils; sorry to spoil a good ghost story, but for the truths of his story, you know, we must.—Terre Haute (Ind.) Express.

An Unlucky Kiss.

"Now," said the old man, as he drew in the last nail, "if they want to swing on the gate let 'em do it; it's strong enough for all the town, and moonlight's cheaper than coal oil, anyhow."

"Husband, you're a brute to talk that way." and his better half

"What's the matter now, old woman?"

"You know that Matilda doesn't swing on the gate with her young beau at night Oh, that I should ever have lived to hear her own father say so!"

"Now look here, old woman, don't you condemn Matilda for that!"

"No condemn Matilda for swinging on the gate with a young man! I like to know what harm there is in it, I should like to know?"

"You'd better not!"

"Don't you say she said out at night with young men, and it saved expense, you old skinflint!"

"I won't swing!"

"Oh, you were! Your own flesh and blood, my poor, innocent Matilda, to be made a jest! That I should ever have lived to hear—and the poor woman broke down with a sobbing

"Now, see here, old woman," said the husband, kindly, but firmly, "if you don't hush your nonsense and dry up, I'll tell Matilda's beau not to be caught swinging on the gate with her at night, and I'll tell 'em why."

"You will, hey?"

"Yes, I will, because when I was a courting young man, I was swinging on the gate with a young woman one night, and Sam Simmons kissed me, and I'll just as she gave me the good night kiss."

She commenced laying around for something.

"It was the most unlucky kiss I ever got, for Sam gave up trying after that, and he wasn't at all handsome, either. Sorry long before a large part of the household was enlisted in his service. LOST AND FOUND.

"Oh where now is Tommy" and who has seen Tommy?

And why does he keep us so all in a worry?

Mamma looked down the well, and we let down the bucket!

But we found not a trace of our stray little master.

We searched in the pond, and we waded all through it;

But not in the pond had he made a disaster,

Then go in the railroad, down there by the station!

Perhaps on the track he has fallen while play ing!

And go to the mill, then—perhaps he was carried Straight over the dam in his death! there's no saying!"

"He's not in the mill-dam, he's not by the station!

He's not in the carpenter's shop by the way!

The blacksmith, the butcher, the grocer, the baker!

Not one of them all has seen Tommy to day!

"There's Carrie! Here, Carrie, car where is your brother?

You naughty old dog—have you left him in danger?

In the dark, lonely forest, sir, did you forsake him?

Where neighbors is gone from the camp and the ranger?"

"How now!" answered Carrie, with a look rather sour,

"Am I always to have you a-scolding me?

And then startling up, he ran straight to the stable

We after him scudded, in hopes to find Tommy,

And found she followed, though hardly so able.

With nose in the ground, on six limbs trailed he,

Then right-about-face on the hay had been boiling.

There lay Tommy half smiling poor rascal, and cozy by

Here's Tommy, good woman, sir, hearty and rosy,

Now, Tommy! Why! that is such trouble!

We drove on the hay when no more room was squirrel!

FROGGIE'S STORY.

BY TAD POLE.

Yes, I am a frog now, but somehow I got used to my other name and hardly like to give it up, but I am a frog for all that.

Didn't you hear me sing last night? Certain I heard you raise your window. Oh, you were shutting it, were you? Well, that is curious. Perhaps you did not hear me then, but I thought you would and so I sang just as loud as I could.

They think I can't sing, they're quite a singer, and, when known, perhaps I shall be engaged to sing at one of these Cape May balls, if I should be; I will be sure and hold at least one frog convention under your bed-room window.

Excuse me, ma'am, but I'm thinking that we're all of us unruly plants; and if the Good Gardener didn't pinch us and hinder us in our ways a bit now and then, what noxious things we should be, not bearing any blossoms for His glory."

The old man shook his gray head as he bent it over a tall fuchsia. And Tom laughed at him, as if he thought things were getting funny.

"You are right, Deanis," mamma said. "That is very true, and I am glad to learn this lesson for them children from the plants. Do you see, Tom?" turning toward Tom and Carrie, "that we are just like the plants, reaching out to go the ways that seem pleasant to us, and longing to do our foolish hearts please? But God, who is the wise Gardener, holds us back sometimes, and hinders us and disappoints us, and does not let us do as we planned. And that is like Deanis pinching the roots of his plants. It is to make us have better things, to give our lives a chance to blossom with cheerfulness, and patience, and content. These are the flowers which are of great price to be put by Him who loves us, even when we did not look to go our own way."

And now I must go; for mother is crooking for me to come to dinner. Good by.—Christian Union.

Pinching the Roots.

THE children had been watching Deanis, as he tended the plants for the green house They enjoyed it very much—Carrie and Tom, and even little Bell, who talked about with her sweet baby, and talked as fast as any of them.

The still autumn air was so pleasant, and the frosty were so beautiful, and the robes of red and yellow, and it was good to be out of doors. And so the children played and sang, and chatted, and went round and around the flower beds; and did not think of going in the house until it was time for dinner.

But the best thing of all was when mamma herself came out, and began to look on too, and to find out her favorite plants, and encouraging Deanis with her cheerful words.

"Hallloo, here's mamma," cried Tom, tugging here, and nothing proud that he was getting so tall. "Isn't it a jolly day? And see what lots Deanis has done all by himself."

"Yes, the beds begin to look quite nice, lady."

Bell ran in holding out her little hands full of flowers, and nearly fell into one of the big boxes which Deanis had made ready for the plants that were to be taken in-doors, mamma," Carrie said, who had her hands full, too. "Deanis will cut them all off! Hollo—such queer things," she said softly, as the old man bent over a plant on the opposite side of the wall.

Mamma smiled, and they all watched Deanis carefully around the plant, and lifted it to put it in the pot It was a delicate, beautiful thing, and the children stood up on tiptoe to look at the earth around it, as if he were very pleased at it. Then he slipped it into the pot, and began to pat the earth down in their places, and covering them with snow earth.

"Oh, Deanis!" cried Carrie, who had her arms full of scarlet leaves, and others in the same way, and could not bear it any longer, what makes you pinch the roots so? I should think you'd hurt the poor things."

The old man looked up at her, and then looked down again, and laughed in his queer little way.

"Hurt 'em?" he said: "hurt my beauty! Not a bit of it! Don't you hear, Miss? I know the flowers, and they know me."

Carrie looked a little indignant, while the others smiled at Deanis, who lifted the last pot and leaves in the box nearly. Mamma noticed the look on Carrie's face, and she said to the gardener, as he would give them a few more things if he wanted to.

"Yes, I'll speak to you again," he answered, and then he went on with his work.

And little Bell took occasion, while they were talking to see how far she could reach her hand into one of the holes from which a plant had been taken.

"Yes, I can get to the sides. Right enough! Would I be letting the roots run about, my way they please, when I had the best way for 'em to grow? Just just pack 'em close in their places, and pinch 'em, as Miss Carrie says, to keep them there, and then give them plenty of earth; and that's the way I get pretty plants. Why, you see, Miss, the poor plants don't know; and if I didn't keep 'em back and crowd 'em up some the plant would all go to root, and I shouldn't get any flowers. So I take a pot that's a little too big for the plant, and crowd the roots some and teach 'em what they have to do; and pretty soon they begin to be content with their place, and put up strength into the plant, and that makes beautiful blossoms."

It was quite a long speech for the old man, and he had only potted one more bush in the meantime. Tom wondered if his mother was going to stand there and let him work on. She only smiled, with a thoughtful look in her face, and said to Carrie—"Do you understand?"

Yes, ma'am, I think I do."

And she watched with a new interest, as Deanis planned his trowel about the roots of the next plant. After a moment he stopped, touched his hat to mamma, and said:

"Excuse me, ma'am, but I'm thinking that we're all of us unruly plants; and if the Good Gardener didn't pinch us and hinder us in our ways a bit now and then, what noxious things we should be, not bearing any blossoms for His glory."

It Got Monotonous.

SIX or seven days ago an old man entered the store of a Detroit hard ware man, who also deals in seeds, and, inquiring for the proprietor, soon found face to face with him.

"Want to see me?" asked the dealer.

"Yes, sir; I do. Some days ago this coming spring I bought a paper of seeds of you—"

"I presume so."

"I never saw it, sir! Seven years ago, sir, and not one of them seeds come up."

"Well, that's funny," laughed the dealer.

"You may think it was," said the old man, "but I'll make it cost you one hundred dollars! When you sell me them seeds, sir, you did not know that you were dealing with a liar."

"Well, you stop your blowing and get to the point."

Give me a package of cabbage seeds, sir!"

"I won't!"

The old man went away, but in an hour returned and said in a loud voice:

"Some days ago this coming spring I bought a package of seeds at this store. Not one of those seeds arose from the ground."

He was ordered out, and he went out. He was there the next morning as soon as the proprietor was, and he said:

"Seven years ago this coming spring you sold me a package of seeds. Not one single seed germinated in the soil."

He was put out that time, but he returned in the afternoon, when he drew near his call of customers, and exhibited a sworn statement that he had planted the seeds to fill the space with corn, with like force in indicating to the queen bee that it was time to swarm, and effect, if the entire hive is made into space, it is but fulfilling that law for the bees to prepare for the future by filling honey, it, perchance, it is in abundant supply, but madam queen being present, we must allow a swarm to issue, that it may join together in a close battle near the fly, shaking in very often. As soon as the gums are dissolved it is ready for use. Then take a roller of woolen rags—soft and breadth will do nicely—put a little of the polish on it, also a few drops of linseed oil. Rub the surface to be polished with this, going round and round, over a small space at a time, until it begins to be quite dry, then with a fresh rag a second rubbing with spirits of wine and more of the polish. Finish with linseed oil to new.—Oil and Paint Journal.

Hints for Home Work.

THERE is a pudding in small towns among people who don't "set" at the head chief of easy, against bookcases in the parlor or sofa-rooms. People, however, who have plenty of books are apt to go to early style, and knows how to furnish their houses with good sense and like meaning. Yet there are, no doubt, among even this class of our readers many young couples just beginning housekeeping with little money, who have not yet learned to carry out their ideas, or help themselves to the useful and pretty things which they cannot buy. They have the right feeling about the home nest, they know them as old friends, and feel that hospitality requires that they shall be be showed with comfort and beauty, whose income is small. Without even doing without a single article of furniture on which they would spend so much money as on the bedroom, Antique carving, black with age, inlaid work, bronze bassreliefs, would be but ill housing for their grace and faithful friends; but they have no money for carving, bronze, or even solidly made cases. By all means, let them avoid the cheap plants up open at the first touch of furnace heat, and whose rickety shelves are perpetually tumbling out of place. The spirit would exasperate from Ellie on Thackeray would utter platitudes, shut up in such a slum, just as cold Mexico loses its aroma in a plated pot.

Let the carpenter or Tomkinsett, if he come of a family that have the use of their hands build a case of walnut boards fitting closely into the recesses on each side of the fire-place The back can be made of well-seasoned pine stained. The case should be from four to five feet high, with three shelves, the top carving slightly in the center Strips of open walnut molding can be fastened on the sides and base, the top covered with cloth, and the edges of the shelves finished with either strips of scalloped leather or woolen fringe off the same that as the border of carpet and wall paper) put on with silver tacks. The casted such a case, if Tom builds it in off hours from the office, ought not to be more than six dollars; it will be large enough to hold four or five hundred volumes, and can readily be duplicated as books increase until the cases make a dado of learning, all and shelves all around the room. No matter what the other furniture, this part of it will always appear solid, neat and artistic. Three cases, of course, would be better, but two sometimes coal is natural, and the books must be protected from soot and sodium.

If Adella has also "brains in her fingers," there is no better way in which she can help Tom to make home home like than by draping windows, mantel shelves and door ways. These are some of the "et cæteras" of home-furnishing from which ingenuity can make a little but not much, but which, if made at home, need not half the expenditure of money, and if done, as does, should be done, skilfully and sewed by herself. But let her eschew all the stiff, angular lambrequins, which are so popular, and still less be tempted by any paper abominations—Drapery on a wall or a woman should be soft, full and flowing, or it loses its first significance.

There is seldom any need for shoes in the inside of a house. If they must be worn, why not have the flash with the wall and decorated, so that they cannot be distinguished from the paper or frescoe. If you can get it," was the reply. "Here it is," said the unfortunate lender. The other took the note, and, going to Wiuslow, recovered the full amount, under threats of exposure and prosecution. Within a short time Winslow applied to the Maverick Bank for a loan, offering certain notes as collateral. The President found that Mr E. D. Poland, whose name Mr. Winslow offered, had not declined to endorse his note. On the same day Mr. Winslow called at the bank and informed the President that he had not arranged his collaterals then, but would have them ready the following day. He came promptly, presented his note, indorsed with the name of Mr. Poland, and obtained $6,000. Mr. Potter showed the note to Mr. Poland, who pronounced the indorsement a forgery. Mr. Potter sent for Winslow and demanded the amount of the loan, and Winslow said that if Potter would wait half an hour he would obtain the full amount. Mr Potter sent a trusty representative with Winslow, who returned with the money.—Boston Globe.

Where Does It All Come From?

Fluids and quants of filthy Catarrhal discharges. Where does it all come from? The immense membranes which lines the chambers of the nose, and the Eustachian tube are diseased, so that they draw from the blood the fluids, and pump them out. All changes it into corruption. This life-fluid is carried to build up the system, but it is retarded, and the system is weakened by the loss. To cure, renew and strengthen by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which acts directly upon these glands, correcting them, and apply Dr. Sage's Catarrh remedy will do. Pierce's Nasal Douche, the only method of reaching these remote cavities, where Mr. discharge accumulates and comes from. The cure is sure, safe, and can be had only by druggists and dealers in medicines.

How to Secure Premium Honey.

DR P. A BAKER, in the Beekeeper's Magazine, publishes a plan to secure the largest quantity and the best quality of honey, which we condense as follows:

The plan is simply to keep a very strong colony queenless during the period of the honey harvest. Any beginner can easily learn how to fasten on the slide and manage the nucleus. A pretty fashion is to have the bride-maids represent a bouquet of colors, dressing two in blue, two in pink, and two in violets or green crape. With these adored crapes bridesmaids select large white roses for the grandma dresses, since so much is now worn. The mother of the bride usually chooses pearl color or gray for the dress with which she accompanies the bridegroom to the altar, but of late these grave colors have been thought to mar the effect of the other toilets of the bridal party, and ivory silk has been worn instead. It is lady is advanced in years—dark, rich velvet, either golden brown, wine-color, or black, is used for trimming the white silk.—Harper's Bazar.

A Forger's Way of Doing Business.

ONE gentleman unexpectedly found himself to a large amount bearing his name on the street, and Winslow solicited to have it withdrawn, but the owner refused to do so. Winslow's intercession and promise to make good the amount, he assumed the note, and passed it from Winslow's check in partial settlement and notes bearing excellent names for the balance. Some of these transpired before the forged notes were forgeries, and that Winslow subsequently forged another note for a large sum upon a wealthy friend. Another case has come to light in which Winslow forged the name of a party to a note for $10,000, upon which he realized the money. The gentleman was waited upon by the holder of the note and asked if his name was good for the amount "Yes, if you can get it," was the reply. "Here it is," said the unfortunate lender. The other took the note, and, going to Winslow, recovered the full amount, under threats of exposure and prosecution. Within a short time Winslow applied to the Maverick Bank for a loan, offering certain notes as collateral. The President found that Mr E. D. Poland, whose name Mr. Winslow offered, had not declined to endorse his note. On the same day Mr. Winslow called at the bank and informed the President that he had not arranged his collaterals then, but would have them ready the following day. He came promptly, presented his note, indorsed with the name of Mr. Poland, and obtained $6,000. Mr. Potter showed the note to Mr. Poland, who pronounced the indorsement a forgery. Mr. Potter sent for Winslow and demanded the amount of the loan, and Winslow said that if Potter would wait half an hour he would obtain the full amount. Rheumatism a Symptom of Other Diseases.

The alarming extent of chronic rheumatism in the country has led to persistent investigation. It has lately been ascertained that the disease is the result of other complicated diseases of the liver, kidneys, pancreas, blood, nervousness, etc. In other words, that rheumatism is a symptom. It is also found that, by the removal of the complicated disease, the rheumatism disappears, as a result which seems to substantiate the theory. We all know, in our mother, how familiar the ordinary treatment of this disease has been, and we now hail with joy the dawn of this new discovery. We all know that the symptoms of these diseases are generally present in cases of chronic rheumatism, but few have supposed the disease to be an effect.

To remove these diseases the natural remedy can be found in the PACIFIC EXTRACT OF ROOTS OR CURATIVE SYRUP. It appears to be working many cures. We refer to the articles sold by Druggists and A. J. White, New York.

SENATOR CHANDLER was married at Washington on Tuesday morning to Miss Lizzie Hoopingel, a clerk in the Treasury Department. Senator Perry Thurston at present is single. Chandler is nearly sixty four years old.

Patrick Morley, late managing editor of the Detroit Post has removed to Chicago. He has been appointed U. S. Agent and Consul General at Cape Haytien. Mr. Morley is an excellent newspaper man, and will make a good consul.

THE strong recommendation for Senator Perry, in the resolution for Vice President, in the list of his many great and many kind personality and public. There is hardly a democratic paper in the country but that has some fine and good things of Mr. Perry, and we agree at least one half of them would gladly join the nomination for this high office.

Secretary Chandler's appointment to the Interior Department is no longer a subject of criticism. A Washington correspondent says his administration is now considered a model one, not only in the management of the affairs of the office, but for the economy with which bids are conducted. The surplus receipts of the Department for January were larger by $10,000 than any previous single month in the history of the office, amounting to $70,000.

Mr. W. G. STIMSON, of Mackinaw city has in his possession a fine bald headed American Eagle, which was captured in the Straits off of the Mackinaw by two of Mr. S.'s sons the day after the heavy gale last November in which so many vessels met their demise. The bird was in the water and from some cause unable to rise. It did not appear to be in any way wounded or hurt, and the manner in which it now flies about in the large coop shows pretty conclusively that it is anything but "sick, sore, lame or disordered." It measures more feet across the wings and is yet evidently a young bird without its full growth.

HON. J. A. HUBBELL has introduced a bill in the House that will make, if it passes, the Upper Peninsula a United States Judicial District by itself. From what we can learn the bill will probably pass and as a dissolution of partnership has recently taken place in Mr. Hubbell's law firm, by which he's left alone in business, some people are inclined to infer that Mr. Hubbell will be the first Judge on the bench, in that District. This idea prevails also from the fact that the bill makes Houghton Mr. Hubbell's place of residence, the head quarters of the District. The position is for life and warm as $4,000 per month.

We know of no man in the Upper Peninsula that would be more able to fill the place with honor than Mr. Hubbell, but the Iron District wants his Congressional services a while longer.

The late Byron D. Ball, of Grand Rapids, who died after a lingering illness in Perley last, was a man of ability and energy, and when his powers were weighted by disease, stood on the threshhold of a career of unusual promise. He was a native of this State and had early grown up with the thriving city of Grand Rapids of which his father was one of the pioneer settlers. He graduated in the first class of the Ann Arbor law school, was prosecuting attorney of Kent county for two terms, ry resented that county in the State Senate in 1871, was president of the Republican State Convention of the same year, and was elected Attorney General in 1872. The spinal troubles, which in the end proved fatal, compelled him to resign that position and forced a suspension of all labor in the very prime of his manhood, which has now ended in death.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix—ss. At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Charlevoix holden at the Probate office in the village of Charlevoix, on Monday, the 7th day of February, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six.

Present, Hon. Wm. Brace, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Jessey Wells, late of the township of Charlevoix, in said county, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Margaret Wells, widow of said deceased, praying for reasons therein set forth that administration of said estate may be granted to her or to some other suitable person.

Thereupon it is ordered, that Monday, the 6th day of March next, at the office of said in the township, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. And it is further ordered that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said County of Charlevoix, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

WM. BRACE, Judge of Probate.

THE NEWS.

ON the evening of the 4th, Mr. Henry C. Bowen sent a lengthy letter to the Examining Committee of Plymouth Church, in reply to the complaints of Mr. S. V. White, a member of said committee. In this letter Mr. Bowen announces his belief in the guilt of Mr. Beecher, as charged by Messrs. Tilton and Moulton, and challenges Plymouth Church to appoint its committee to investigate openly and rigorously his (Bowen's) words and deeds, either in or out of church, from the day of his birth to the present time. The committee prepared a letter to Mr Bowen, summoning him to appear before them on the evening of the 8th to give proof of his assertions.

THE investigation conducted by the British authorities to ascertain the cause of the loss of the steamer Deutschland ascribes the wreck to an utter infatuation regarding the captain's disregard of the force and direction of the tide, but disclaims on the vessel and the improper conduct of the officers.

A FIRE-DAMP explosion occurred in the Jablo coal mines in Belgium, on the 4th. Up to the present time the dead are forty of the 216 men known to have been in the mine had been rescued alive.

A CONSTANTINOPLE telegram of the 6th says the Porte had that day dispatched to his ambassadors at the courts of the six guaranteeing powers a reply to Count Andrassy's note. He says the Turkish Government had resolved to apply to the insurgent districts the five leading points of Andrassy's scheme.

A VIENNA dispatch of the 6th says Ron manula had threatened to renounce her allegiance to Turkey.

THE Secretary of the Southern Historical Society, in answer to Secretary Bullock's letter, says: "The people of the South are not only willing but anxious that the whole of their official records should be given to the world, and that future historians should have an opportunity of judging them in the light of these records. He asserted, then, if our hearty cooperation in supplying your department with missing Confederate documents. We will have furnished you properly authenticated copies of such as are in our possession, and will assist you in procuring others, if, being understood, of course, that your department will afford us similar facilities in the prosecution of our work."

A CALL has been issued for a Greenback Convention to meet at New Haven, Conn., on the 22d inst. Its object is stated to be "to take such steps as may be necessary to force both political organizations of the States to recognize the voice of the people in the coming campaign."

THE jury in the case of Landis, for the murder at Vineland, N. J., of the editor Carruth, rendered a verdict on the night of the 5th of "not guilty on account of insanity."

JEFFERSON DAVIS has recently written a letter to Judge Lyons, of Richmond, Va., in which he denies that the Confederates at the South during the war were treated with premeditated neglect and cruelty. He says: "It is absurd that the prisoners in our hands were not as well provided for as we would like to have had them. On the other side was not as much." etc. With regard to the question of amnesty he says he has no views of the matter which he could communicate to be included in an amnesty bill and adds: "Viewed in the abstract, or as a purely general question, I would be glad to see the repeal of all laws inflicting the penalty of political disabilities on classes of people; but, in fact, at present, under the Constitution, the left to the courts to hear and decide the cause, and to affix the penalties according to pre-existing legislation."

A SHOCKING calamity occurred in the Cincinnati Opera-house on the afternoon of the 5th, caused by a false alarm of fire. An immense throng of ladies and children had gathered to witness an entertainment called the "Congress of Nations Republic." Just as the performances was about to begin some one in the balcony raised the cry of "fire!" when the crowd in the gallery rushed for the doors. Four women and five children lost their lives in the scramble for exit by being either trampled to death or injured in some other manner, and several others were seriously hurt.

THE residence of George Heindle, near the village of Wellsville, Bureau County, Ill., was destroyed by fire on the night of the 6th, and Mr. Heindle and his two young children perished in the flames. The oldest daughter, about nineteen years of age, made her escape by leaping from the roof of the house, but saved nothing but the night clothes she had on.

TWO FEMALE pedestrians—Miss Von Hillern (a German woman), and Mrs. Marshall, of Chicago—completed a six-days' walking contest at the latter city on the evening of the 5th, the latter winning the contest by about two miles. The distance accomplished by the winner was 522 1/2 miles to 520½ by her opponent. Both women were well exhausted by their lengthy tramp, the winner being, if anything, the worse-used up of the two.

EDWARD S. SPOKES was brought before Judge Dickman, at White Plains, N. Y., on the 6th, on a writ of habeas corpus, and a motion for his release, on the ground that he had been imprisoned ten months before receiving his final sentence, was denied.

CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE, of Utah Territory, in charging the Grand Jury, on the 6th, concerning polygamy, said: "Polygamy must be suppressed in this Territory. Mormonism may survive it, and, relieved from it, would stand unshackled and free as every other creed or mode of religious worship, shielded and protected by the constitution of the United States exactly as it Mormonism cannot never instil from polygamy, it will be to it the triumph of its death."

THE trial of Gen. Babcock was begun in St. Louis on the 5th. He pleaded "not guilty," and the court adjourned to the 8th. A motion for a change of venue in the case of Mr. McKee was made on the 5th.

ON the 8th, the British Parliament was opened by the Queen in person. Lord Cairns, the Lord Chancellor, read Her Majesty's speech.

A MARINE telegram of the 8th says the Royalists had secured entire mastery of the provinces of Biscay and Alava.

SENATOR CHRISTIANCY, of Michigan, was married in Washington, on the 5th, to Miss Lillie Lingerfeel, lately a clerk in the Treasury Department.

A BOMBAY telegram of the 8th says quite a sensation prevailed in Newboryport, Mass., caused by the late marriage of James Parton, the author of his step-daughter, a relative forbidden by the law at that State. The bridegroom learned his status on the morning after the wedding, and left his home in charge of his wife and took rooms for himself at a boarding-house. A special act is to be introduced in the Legislature legalizing the marriage.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

IN the Senate, on the 4th, Mr. Sherman introduced a bill in the Senate to limit the value of bonds and securities authorized to be issued or guaranteed to promote the aid by which the Dominion of Columbia Act bond bill was passed, but it was subsequently withdrawn, and the bill was again passed. The consideration of the Senate bill from Louisiana, was taken up, and Mr. Morton addressed the Senate in favor of the bill. Mr. Howe in favor of his admission. Among the bills introduced was one to prevent the printing. To secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public lands, declaring the birthday of Abraham Lincoln Feb. 12; a national holiday, and appropriating $10,000 to aid the National Hay shall first at half mast; to substitute legal-tender notes for National Bank notes, and to make the circulation of the receivable one-half in legal-tender notes, and to repeal the resumption act of the 14th of January, 1875, to give right of action for injuries resulting from the use of intoxicating liquors, and a motion to suspend the rules to consider resolutions declaring that Congress has no constitutional right in time of peace, to issue the paper of the Government as money, and that all legislation should never in the resumption of specie payment, was defeated—yeas, 36; nays, 36. The Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill were non-concurred in, and a Conference committee was appointed. A resolution was adopted instructing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to inquire into and report what action, if any, has been taken by the Executive Department of the Government in relation to the connection of the United States Minister at the Court of St. James with the Geneva Tribunal of Arbitration, and with the prosecution of the Machado claim. The Senate amendments to the bill to provide for the payment of judgments rendered by the Alabama Court of Claims were concurred in. The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was considered in committee of the Whole.

IN the 5th a number of House bills were presented in the Senate, and referred. Mr. Ferry, President pro tem., was, at this time, sworn entered from brief service on the Finance committee, and Mr. Conger was appointed in his successor on such committee. The Centennial bill was taken up, but the House amendments were not acted upon, with the understanding that the ruling of the Court on the constitutionality should be given thereafter. The witness then began to speak about Megrue, when defense again objected, and he was withdrawn, and a Mr. Thompson, Cashier, was called to the stand, and gave a history of his connection with the ring; explained how he made counterfeit checks, etc., all of which had been stated somewhere about before, barring the examination. After this witness the defense objected to all questions and directly relevant to the indictment and bank would to the second count. Mr. Bliss ruled that testimony to establish the existence of the conspiracy might be given, and that the defense was admitted. Further testimony and its operations. Fitzroy was then recalled, and was asked if Megrue ever paid him any money, when objection was again ruled, and the court ruled that evidence received was competent for the jury to hear, but might be received, and subsequently ruled out if found to be irrelevant to the case on trial. Adjourned.

SECOND DAY.

Acting under the advice of the court, given just before the adjournment the day before, the Government counsel passed over the conspiracy in 1874 and 1875, and produced testimony to show the existence and operations of the whisky ring from 1872 to 1875. No objection was made to the admission of the testimony. Mr. Babcock, the testimony being general in character. Mr. Bliss also admitted the evidence, and the extent of the conspiracy.

Deputy-Collector Fitzroy testified that he met Gen. Babcock at the Jandell Hotel, in September, 1874, and was introduced to him by Wm. O. Avery; witness was then under indictment for conspiracy, and Babcock said he was simply an introduction; there was any conversation.

Rudolph W. Ulrich, distiller, and John F. Seckenrid, his foreman, were sworn, and testified as to the manner of manufacturing whisky, and Ulrich's books were produced, showing the payment of money paid to revenue officers, and the said money was raised to buy off revenue agents, where irregularities were discovered by them.

It was stated by the defense that they had intended to have the personal attendance of President Grant as a witness, but this was not now thought to be necessary, and a proposition was made and agreed to that the testimony be given absent, and taken the place of the deposition of the President. Such an arrangement was made, the deposition from the date of testifying. Before the court

The Chinese New Year in San Francisco.

In the Chinese quarter yesterday (Jan 25,) work was laid aside, engagement relegated, and high and low, richand poor, altered the dull routine of their daily lives, and on the first day of the new year regaled themselves with a holiday. The cobbler's seat on the corner was vacant, the ball-room shoes and patched up boots were laid aside, and the cobbler himself was arrayed in his "best lib and tucker, looking remarkably different in his dandified dress from the stooping, busy figure in faded and patched clothing that draws waxen threads through cloth shoes on the usual working days. The fortune-fed cassilly built beneath the weight of two heavy baskets hung on a pole gave up for the day the sale of vegetables, fruit and fish, with a patriotic disregard of coin truly wonderful. No single duck deep in the city was yesterday tapped by a Celestial biter with the inquiry, "You likee Bohee?" for work on the festive occasion was sacrificed and enjoyment a duty. With them, as with the Americans, the practice of making calls prevails, and all through the day the houses were filled by a quaint ances, going and coming, remaining a few moments to pass the compliments of the day, drinking a glass of wine, and then making way for the next caller. Notmade in the hands of all were little slips of red paper marked with Chinese characters, those being the visiting cards.

The exhibitory portion of the town scraped up rich garments, full dress being the rule. When no acquaintance was met a graceful bow took place on either side, a polite word on the side speaker, and nothing but who had published the popular bow-line of Chinamen in general by the courtliness and general kind good-breeding which the saturnine exhibited. But the visiting was not confined to the Chinese alone. The fame of the big stranded man Indian and gentlemen, who could be seen in all parts of the Chinese quarters, accompanied by their China boys, the latter highly enjoying their office as escorts and guide, and exhibiting a national pride in explaining the myriad points of interest incomprehensible to the American eye. As soon as darkness spread over the city the calling ceased, and most of the residents settled down to a quiet evening at home. Here no one dawdles in the large lantern-like apparel such doorway were lighted, and the part colored rays colored fantastically the faces and dresses of those who thronged on the sidewalks below. Magnificent lanterns of cinnamon in their red green, blue and yellow paint, brilliantly lighted by number less lanterns. The streets in front were filled with persons anxious for admittance. But "no room" were called, though two were chosen, if the gogetters being very particular as to who came in. The single word "Americano" proved a sufficient passport, however, and a reporter followed two ladies and a fat gentleman up the stairway to the eating rooms above. On the way up a primitive-looking kitchen was seen, with an array of brass kettles and other utensils used in preparing the ambrosial feasts that regale the Celestial palate. At the first landing the fat gentleman stopped to blow, and the ladies admired some scraggy-looking specimens of Chinese art upon the walls. In the upper story sat two quite-looking, well-dressed Chinamen, who gravely saluted the visitors as they came in, and conducted them to a small table whereon were placed trays of sweetmeats, tea, liquors, etc. The visitors were invited to partake, and the fat gentleman, not to be outdone in politeness, readily started in, chewing everything that was offered him. He first took some ungarnished cocoanut, then some article that looked like pickled almonds, and tasted pretty well. This embolden him, and he next tackled some stringy little things, that looked like rats' tails fried in rancid lard. This did not go down so easily, and the smile on his face changed to a look of grim determination as he looked at the article yet untasted. The next thing on the list laid him out, however, for worse my little nut that tasted like a well-rotted peanut soaked in a quinine solution. He struggled a little, then gave up and, excusing himself to the ladies, went out to look at the scenery from the rear balcony. In the rear of the room was the Altar, behind which was a large picture of the chief Joss, with a feminine deity at his right hand, and on his left a feminine-looking personage with black whiskers and a ruddy complexion, looking something like the picture of a blood thirsty pirate on the exterior of a dime novel. The altar was ornamented in every conceivable way. Pyramids of lemons and oranges, was interspersed with "images of peaches," artificial flowers, pyramids of cake-shaped flour, cakes painted in a variety of colors and dressed with initials, tiny dragons, lizards, bugs, butterflies, and the like. China lilies blooming in colored vases, cups of tea, and what was called holy water, though it bore the unmistakable evidence of bug-juice; in short, everything eatable and drinkable that a Joss who had been well brought up could ask for or desire. The altar was lighted with colored lamps, the air was freighted with the scent of burning joss and incense, and the whole scene made up in picturesque magnificence built in such artistic taste. The joss-house proper was thronged with visitors, the Americans being quite as devotional as the Chinese. In the large house on Jackson street, above the point, there were baker's dozen of various images, representing the gods of war, of gentleness and of justice, the goddesses of the sea, of domestic affection, etc., and the deities who represent the various ills that make up the Chinese character. The gods and goddesses were placed upon platforms, dressed in silk and surrounded with glittering tinsel work. In front of these were large stands of tin, answering to the candelabras of other altars, holding long pasks which burned endlessly away. The deities were not treated so coldly as the wall, with very little ornament or attention save a punk or two. It was noticeable, however, that the Chinese paid more attention to the Satanic representative than to those from above, for they never failed to pass one of the former without placing the hand fraternally upon the stomach and doubling themselves up like a jack-knife, in anguished devotion. Feeling that the "lucitee" question would miss their accustomed homage in the shape of fire-crackers, a substitute was instituted in each joss house in the shape of drums and cymbals, which made such an unearthly racket as to cause each visitor to meander off with his fingers in his ears, sighing for the comparatively soothing note of a pack of fire-crackers. The deities evidently exercised their influence upon their friends the weather gods, for not a cloud hid the sky nor a drop of rain fell on the silken caps and cloaks and flowered pantaloons and shoes that filled all the available space in the Chinese portion of the town, all smiling in celebrating, as the gamin said it, "Cuhny New Yeres."—San Francisco Chronicle.

An Extraordinary and Daring Woman.

THE following interesting account of the great sensation produced in Paraguay by the arrival of the notorious Eliza Lynch, wife of the tyrant Lopez, who for so many years ruled the Republic with the lash of a despot is translated from La Tia del Xuxo Maude:

Upon the arrival of the tyrant's wife the news spread abroad like wildfire and knots of people gathered together and conversed excitedly. Having gone ashore at Asencion, accompanied by her son, she defiantly passed through the city, although at every step she greeted with hostile movements agitated her. She was perfectly calm, smiled at old friends, called others by name, and to the poor she gave presents of money. Thus she adroitly calmed the storm that commenced to threaten her, and before the reception set in she arrived at the residence of Don Isadore Diaz, a friend and confidant of Madame Lynch, who accompanied the latter to Europe after the death of the "tyrant of Paraguay." She was not long at pence here for the storm again broke out. Fifty ladies, representing the first families of Paraguay, met and passed resolutions demanding the immediate

At the hour mentioned the madame was all ready to step into a coach in readiness for her. She had never been nearly so hot hand, and her features were set and determined as if to sell her life dearly. Dennis Hugh, a young Englishman, offered his services as gallant, which were received. Seeing Mme. Lynch with the weapon in her hand, he requested her to let him have it, as in case of danger it would be more fitting that he should use it. The daring woman replied haughtily that she came to Asencion without ever hitting arms, believing them not necessary, but now had threats were made against her life by her enemies she would show them how a woman could die in defense of her life. So she refused to give up the revolver, and entered the coach accompanied by her son and Mr. Hugh. Although after midnight large crowds had gathered at several points, they were quieted by the driver, and so Mme. Lynch escaped, never again to be permitted to place her foot on the soil of the republic, under penalty of death. Under the trying ordeal this extraordinary woman exhibited the utmost coolness, and had evidently determined. In emergencies, to bring down her man before she hit the dust.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

COTTAGE PIE.—In the bottom of the pie-dish put a good layer of nicely minced mutton or beef, season to taste, add an onion chopped fine, cover with mashed potatoes, and bake in a sharp oven half an hour, or until the potatoes are well browned.

FOR SCARLET FEVER.—An eminent physician of Chicago says he cures nine-ty-nine out of every one hundred cases of scarlet fever by giving the patient warm lemonade with gum arabic dissolved in it. A cloth wring out in hot water and laid upon the stomach should be renewed as rapidly as it becomes cool.

MOTHS will work in carpets in rooms that are kept warm in winter, as well as in summer. A sure method of removing the pests is said to be to pour strong alum water on the floor to the distance of half a yard around the edge before laying the carpets. Then, once or twice during the season, sprinkle dry salt over the carpet before sweeping. Insects do not like salt, and sufficient adheres to the carpet to prevent their alighting on it.

KISSES WITH MACAROON.—Cook two ounces of macaroni broken into convenient pieces, in boiling water, skin two or three mutton kidneys, remove the fat and cut them into thin slices, season with white cayenne and finely-minced herbs, fry them on both sides in butter, then stew them in half a pint of gravy well-thickened with fresh or canned tomatoes, dish with a layer of the macaroni over them, the gravy poured over and pepper and salt and some grated cheese; brown with salamander.

GRILLED SAUCE OF MUTTON.—Cut the remainder thick slices of underdone mutton, score them well, and rub in plentifully some common mustard, salt and cayenne pepper; then broil them over a clear fire, and serve with the following sauce: Take one gill of good gravy, mix with it one tablespoonful of mushroom catsup, one of French mustard, a few chopped capers, a little grated lemon-peel; add a thickening of brown flour and a few drops of lemon-juice; simmer till quite hot; pour over the grill and serve.

THE Journal of Chemistry points out a grave error in measuring the feet of women for boots. It says: Kid gloves, though worn continually, never cause bunions, since the kid stretches to the hand, but in the manufacture of boots, especially ladies' boots, stiffening canvas is used for lining, so that the upper is prevented from stretching and showing the true shape and size of the foot. The foot enlarges when bearing the weight of the body, and also toward evening, hence a boot made from a measure taken when the foot is suspended in the air, and in the morning, is too small for the foot in the evening. Women's feet are generally measured in the air, because the measurers are standing on them. The light heels on ladies' boots, too, cause them to be all jammed forward, so that the toes have only half a way walking down hill, however level the path may be, thus driving the foot by-rotte. It then chops up easily, or may be rubbed through a sieve without loss, and is then in the very best condition for using. I always procure the suet when in a moist state, and lay them up in a large under shelter for a few months. This kills the grass seeds, and the soil never gets too dry, whereas pail got in after a period of dry weather is often parched, and, when used, is hard and knotty.—J. S., in N. Y. World.

Sheep Pelts.

ALL wool growers have more or less sheep pelts to dispose of. At the present time, it is necessary for every wool grower to save all the pelts, for millmen will realize all he can therefrom. Pelts seem mutate in various ways. Most wool growers kill a few fat sheep yearly, for family use. The wool on the close of pelts must frequently is short. Such pelts can be advantageously sold to pelt dealers or tanners. In the wool dealers there are usually some cows too old to retain for breeding purposes. The wool on such cows in the fall or early winter is short, but they are usually pelted in of six to seven months' growth, and will always pay for shear or pull. Another way wherein some shiftless breeder get a large number of pelts, is from poor keeping and bad management, being always in debt, when they leave nearly or quite a full year's growth of wool. It always pays the owner to shear or pull the wool from such pelts for some reason the writer has noticed in pulling his pelts rather than selling them, which pays abundantly for the extra expense of pulling. The reason, I think, is that the pelt of the present month we slaughtered eight old cows, all of which had broken mouths. Knowing that the cows were old, I had either shearing or pulling a pelt is around its edges, before slaughtering, we shear a strip about four inches wide up the front of the neck, and all the wool off the head, and back of the ears sufficiently far to save the wool from getting bloody, also shear the brisket and a circle down the center of the belly, and the wool off of the inside of the legs and thighs, and rip the skin in the center of the belly in the sheared space; and thus the edges of the pelt will be all right to pull or shear, and the wool free from filth. Just as we had finished skinning the cows, a sheep pelt dealer drove into the yard, and proposed to buy the pelts at sixty-five cents each. Had I not refused to sell, he would probably have been willing to pay seventy-five cents, the regular price for shearing pelts. Hoping to benefit wool-growing brethren, we give our plan of practice and the results, showing the profit of pulling over selling the pelts. Pelts, from one to three feet wide to four feet in length, with one smooth side; spread a pelt on the ground with the wool side down, and then have mixed some lime and water, about the consistency of good rich cream (time measured in the air, because the workmen are standing on them. The light heels on ladies' boots, too, cause them to be all jammed forward, so that the toes have only half a way walking down hill, however level the path may be, thus driving the foot by-rotte. THE PRECIOUS THIMBLE.

I HAD noticed in the room of my friend, Mrs Gray, amongst the costly articles that were upon the dressing-table and scattered about the room, a little glass covered shield, and upon the velvet cushion a silver thimble. It was, in itself, no commonplace and inexpensive that I wondered a little to see it there, and seeing my eyes rest upon it, my friend said to me:

"I would not give that, Annie, for all the costly jewels in my jewel-case."

"Tell me about it," I said.

"It happened years ago, when I was not the wife of the rich Mr. Gray, but the widow of Paul Morris, and as very poor that I should now think of the pains I endured from actual cold and hunger. I was happy in one possession, a little blue-eyed daughter, eight years old—the sweetest, most loving little lassie who ever made a mother's heart glad. We lived in one small room in the fourth story of a crowded tenement-house, and there I clothed for actual food, making but a scanty living. I used to grow fairly sick looking at fresh and meat, and hungered for the pure country air for my pale little Jennie. She was so delighted, baby as she seemed to me, sorting out many bores for my work by her handy ways, that I thought never before was mother blessed with so precious a child.

"We were seated one day, Jennie and I, busy each in her own way—I rapidly stitching to finish some shirts, Jennie pasting over her sporting books—when I ran the needle into a hole in the top of my thimble and gave a little cry of pain. Jennie looked up with an air of wise thought on her sweet, womanly little face, saying

"Mamma, you really must have a new thimble. That old one can't be patched up any more."

"I will buy a cheap one soon, I said.

"Does a silver one cost so very much?" she asked.

"Had a dollar or perhaps more. We cannot afford any just now, dear," I answered. "We are saving, you know, Jennie, for two new pairs of shoes, and every penny counts."

"So little up her ragged shoe, and looked at it very gravely

"It is not only summer, she said, "I could run barefooted."

"Jennie!" I cried.

"I know you do not let me," she said, "but if it was to save your poor fingers I could do it."

We said no more then about the matter, but a day or two later I missed Jennie often for an hour at a time, and was told always

"I was just helping Mrs. Marshall a little, mamma."

I made no objection, because Mrs. Marshall, our landlady, was very good to the child, giving her often a cake or an apple morsel. Yet I noticed an air of mystery about Jennie, and wondered what the child was doing for Mrs. Marshall, our landlady, was very good to the child, giving her often a cake or an apple morsel. Yet I noticed an air of mystery about Jennie, and wondered what the child was doing for

The Invention of the Telegraph.

[From an oration by P. Cuperus at the inauguration of the telegraph at Tripoin on the Telegraph road in 1868. Translated from the Greek by Rev. C. W. Wood, of the Sentinel.]

The invaluable discovery of the wonderful thought of modern times, within almost a century. Beginning with the most imperfect experiments, tried in different ways and by various means, having undergone many disappointments it attained to real utility much above expectation and more than the desired object.

George Lesage having designed the first telegraph in 1780, made one at Geneva, which was followed by many others in different parts of Europe but since they all depended on the electricity called statice, which is generated by friction on the surfaces of bodies, and easily escapes, they stopped using the impracticable device, and were finally obliged to abandon it entirely. But then a somewhat perfect method of telegraphy by aerial signals was discovered and spread from Denmark and through all Europe.

After the discovery of the voltaic pile—that fountain of the electricity called dynamic, which does not readily abandon the bodies in which it is contained—the experiments for telegraphing by electricity were renewed. But since the theory of it in 1811 was founded on the easiest decomposition of water, it failed again. It having been discovered in 1820 that a voltaic current circulating around a magnetic needle, changes its polarity, another was made of telegraphing with multimedles, one for each letter of the alphabet. But since a connection was wanted by means of a conductor of insulated wire, the use of metallic wires as conductors as the letters of the alphabet, proved almost impossible in practice.

But Ampere having observed at that time that pure iron, if magnetized for the moment, at or be connected with the electric current of the voltaic pile, a firm foundation and principle was found, upon which is built all the present rattle of telegraphing to this day. But the instruments of this new miracle of men, their arrangement, the ways, the appliances and everything connected for the easier production of the first telegraph despatch, were conceived by Samuel Morse, professor of Design in the United States of America, in the year 1832, and he is rightly called the first who so practice telegraphy. The system according to which he arranged the telegraph, is called the electrical and, is in use to-day throughout all Europe except England. It has been maintained since 1810, when it was first introduced in America, the country on him who first perfected it. This telegraph of itself writes the message with a conventional alphabet composed of lines and points variously arranged. And to this system those in Greece have also been adapted, and the one now introduced here, of which from this time we too enjoy the benefit.

Among the employes of the Democratic House of Representatives there men who were dismissed from the Post-office Department last summer for copy piracy in the frauds which Postmaster General Jewell discovered at that time. One officiates as a Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, another as Clerk of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-office Department, while the third is now by the Committee on Postoffices and Post-roads to hunt up evidence of corruption in the department from which he was dishonorably discharged. This is a fair specimen of Democratic reform.

GRAND LODGE I. O. G. T.—The Grand Lodge of Michigan I. O. G. T. lately completed its twenty-second annual session at Ypsilanti. About 200 delegates were present, and much business of importance was transacted. The annual report of Rev John Russell, G. W. C. T., was a long document, and its showings favorable to the Order throughout the State.

John Evans, Grand Worthy Secretary, presented his annual report. For four or five years the order retrograded and lost ground in the State, until three years ago it numbered less than 5,000 members, and but little more than 100 lodges. For two years previous to the present, the Order gained ground fairly slowly, and this report shows that the past year has been one of prosperity. During the past year 119 new lodges have been instituted. The present number of working lodges is 202. The present membership is about 10,000, an increase of 4,000 during the year. The financial condition of the Grand Lodge is encouraging. The following are the officers chosen for the coming year:

G. W. C. T.—John Russell, Detroit.
G. W. C.—Thomas Bottomley, Cypre.
G. W. V. T.—Mrs D. M. Fraser, Battle Creek.
G. W. Sec.—John Evans, Baltic.
G. W. T.—A. B. Sharp, North Adams.

PRIVATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Cheboygan ss. At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Cheboygan, holden at the Probate office in the village of Cheboygan, on Monday the 7th day of February, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six.

Present, Hon. Wm. Brown, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Wells late of the township of Charlevoix, in said county, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition duly verified of Harriet Wells, widow of said deceased, praying for reasons therein set forth that administration of said estate may be granted to her or some other suitable person.

It is ordered that Tuesday, the fourteenth day of March next at one o'clock in the forenoon be assigned for the hearing of said petition and that the heirs at law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the village of Cheboygan, in said county, and show cause why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted and that notice thereof and of the pendency of said petition and the hearing thereof be given to all persons interested in said estate by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said County of Charlevoix, three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

Wm. Brown Judge of Probate.

St. Valentine, Cupid and Cupidity—The Shrieking Sisterhood.

Too Much Species—The Tribune of To-Day—Reckless Dissents.

The New Ecumenical Council.

From Our Own Correspondent.

New York Feb 23 1876

TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL —

St Valentine's day, sacred to Cupid has passed as tightly by. Its last, but for the liberal display of the usual assortment of dashes in the stationers' windows, I should n't should have remembered its occurrence. Whether this means that the memory of this saint is actually falling into neglect, or the year correspondent having crossed the precautions are of callow sentiment is getting curious and unmindful of the ceremonies still observed among the youthful ranks from which and Thackeray supplied him, is too delicate a question for present discussion. I will venture, however, to assert that a feast as to Cupidity would receive a good deal more attention in New York at least, than this one to Cupid.

The only event that of all served to mark the day here, was its celebration by the shrieking sisterhood, society, Sorosis. The existence of the Society's continued existence was a genuine surprise to your correspondent, as it doubtless will be to many of your readers, but the fact remains that it still lives picturesquely as ever to fight to its arms against the "tyrant man," whose ever the latter ingeniously neglects to offer his aid for the time of his. Sorosis was born February 14, 1856, so that the meeting above-mentioned was the celebration of its twentieth birthday. And now that it has attained a unexceptionable age, why can't some self-sacrificing Mormon marry the whole concern and transplant it to the blooming shores of the Great Salt Lake? Such an act of benevolence is one which New York could never repay or forget.

About the last trouble which one would expect to arise in a country which has had nearly two decades of paper currency, is a redundancy of specie, but just that seems now to loom up before us. The Nevada mines, under the impulse of new discoveries and improved processes are turning out such quantities of silver as threaten to greatly reduce the value of the metal. In consequence of this, our ultra-sowing senators, doubtless alarmed lest their silver darlings should be thereby cut down to a trillion or two a day, now propose to change our standard from gold to silver, and debase the silver dollar to the level of the greenback. The N. Y. Tribune takes up this subject, and after denouncing the project indicated, gives an able opinion regarding the true method of absorbing the surplus bullion, partly by letting it replace our present fractional currency, and partly by substituting it for merchandise in adjusting our trade balances with Asia, which latter plan it shows to be entirely feasible.

The opinion thus expressed is worthy of careful consideration, coming as it does from the foremost journal on this continent—a journal which founded and raised to pre-eminent prominence by one of the purest and greatest Americans, has since his death, risen to a higher position than it ever before occupied. For it is not to be gainsaid that despite Mr Greeley's greatness as a philanthropist and philosopher, the former management of The Tribune from a journalistic point of view was not equal to the present one. The Tribune of to-day is the finest specimen of that one great result of the Liberal Movement, independent journalism. In politics as in all the great questions of the day, it occupies the true position of a great metropolitan newspaper; neither standing aloof from the contest, nor held in the lurch by either side, but after grasping and defining the merits of a case with unexcelled clearness, dealing its blows in behalf of justice and public policy, to whichever ranks they may be found. Its news is usually complete, and above all, reliable. Its foreign correspondence is the best we have, while its unusual, dramatic, and all critiques are by common consent, standard.

The Tribune's tone and policy are well-nigh unique in this country. They evince a dignity, a moderation, a consistency, and a straightforwardness which are in strong contrast to the insincere, harum-scarum style of journalism which obtains too generally at this day.

In nothing are these qualities more clearly illustrated than in the policy of the paper towards its detractors.

I presume that no live place a journal was ever subjected to more persistent, systematic, outrageous, and maligning attacks, than is The Tribune from certain parts of its contemporaries. And and is not back for them to come, as charges too silly or too improbable for them to reiterate ad nauseam. Had The Tribune not fulfilled the expectation of its enemies by noticing these attacks, it would have entered upon an endless task with the difficulty of successfully meeting charges so utterly silly that refuting them would be in most cases a farce. But into the trap the editor of The Tribune deemed it to fall, and was, after three months of fruitless endeavor to provoke some deviation from the cutting silence maintained by the paper, its opponents now find themselves in a pitiful awkward condition. To continue the one-sided fight in the expectation of being repaid not to be guerilla banks hopeless, and to abandon a field where they are having their own way unmolested, would expose them to even greater ridicule. It is an opponent, not deserted dilemma, the sort of which is not yet, but no intervention of even silence maintained by the paper, its opponents now find themselves in a pitiful awkward condition. MY NEIGHBOR AND I.

ein' I pity my neighbor over the way,
Who has'nt nothing to do but yawn all day.
No little hands to tumble her hair,
No little voices to vex her with care,
No little troubles to worry and tease;
Nothing to do but cuvvosh her own ease.

Poor rich neighbor, I'm sorry for you—
Sorry, because you have nothing to do."
Sorry, because, as the days go by,
You are restless and weary—you know not why.
And were to a white I was ave the trace
Of worry a care on your fair, proud face.

I am only a laborer's wife,
Busy my part in the tiresome life.
Low, my husband, is all day,
Wishing the grass to "stand" away.
Baby and I are his help'ers, you see,
But we're plenty of time to be sorry for you.

Baby's sunbeams, a plague and joy,
But then, you see, he's my own sweet boy.
I'm no time for a groan or a sigh,
No time to be idle or stop to cry;
We scrimp for all we the day is long,
Full as my heart with the hearty song.

Poor rich neighbor over the way,
Wanting no baby and no art play,
What'r'e' one wealth if your heart is bare!
Tis the love and beloved that makes life so fair.
So, neighbor mine, I can tell you true,
Indeed I'd rather be I than you.

THE VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

A Reminiscence of Olden Times in San Francisco.

At midnight on the 12th of June, 1851, the denizens of San Francisco were startled from their slumbers by the tolling of the bell on the California engine house. Soon, one and all, individuals were seen flocking through the streets in all directions, making eager inquiries of each other as to the cause of the unusual sounds, while others were collected in groups on the street corners and sidewalks, discussing in low, earnest tones some important topic. It was evident, from these facts, that something unusual was transpiring, not fully understood by the masses. But the explanation soon came in the hearty, unexpected treat of a body of men moving up California street, toward Montgomery. Quickly, but steadily and solidly, they marched, through Montgomery to Clay, up Clay to the plaza, where they halted and formed into a hollow square, facing outward, silently awaiting further orders. This was the famous Committee of Vigilance, and in all its strength and might, prepared to mete out summary justice, unhindered by legal quibbles or technicality, for, in one of the hands of villains who, for some months past, had defied the laws, the courts and the people. This band had been arrested, tried, convicted, sentenced, and was about to be executed, all within the space of a few hours, by this power, full, self-constituted tribunal, formed of the solid men of the city and indorsed by all lovers of justice. The causes which gave rise to its organization were most certainly justifiable at that time, and under the then existing circumstances. It is a sad state of affairs, it is true, which forces people of a civilized community to resort to the extreme measure of taking the law in their own hands, but it is, as a general thing, a dangerous precedent to establish anywhere. But in this instance, at least, it was justifiable, for the people of San Francisco, in 1851, resorted to the only means of self-preservation left them, a personal defense of their lives and their property, and, acting upon the old saying that "you must fight the devil with fire," they formed themselves into a secret organization, pledged to stand by each other at all hazards in ridding the city at last of the cause of their fears, "The Thugs," and as this man Jenkins was one of that notorious gang, and had been caught in the act of robbery, and was known to be a house-burner and murderer, he was a fit subject on which to begin the crusade.

We do not live in California to-day, and were not residents here during the first years of her history, else we form no idea of the state of society then existing. Men of every shade of character, temperament and occupation came to the new El Dorado, in search of gold. Among them to arrive were some of the most desperate and lawless scoundrels known in the annals of crime, and as San Francisco was the entrance for the whole country, it was soon infested and overrun with a class of desperadoes from every quarter of the globe, who saw here a fruitful field for the repetition of the tricks and outrages which had rendered their late abodes too warm for them. The large cities of the Atlantic States and Europe had furnished their quota, the Spanish American towns had lent a liberal supply of delegates, and many of the disbanded volunteers who had won the country from Mexico turned out to be men of the worst character. But the most desperate and clever combination came from Australia. Those "Sidney Coves" were either escaped convicts, ticket-of-leave men, or had finished their term of banishment or servitude in that vast penal colony of Great Britain, who, on their arrival in San Francisco, seeing the almost entire absence of law and the lawlessness and state of society, began at once their depredations on the inhabitants of the unprepared and unprotected town, and up to this time had continued to commit theft, arson, robbery, murder and every other crime known to law, unmolested. What little of the law that existed was powerless to check in the slightest degree the reign of crime—in fact, it had become a matter of ridicule. The police were few in number, and many of them were in league with the criminals, and when one of the rascals was brought to trial it was impossible to secure conviction.

From technical errors, sharp lawyers, false swearing of witnesses for the prisoners, bribery, intimidation and worse appalling, timidity of jurors, and weakness and vacillation of the judge, the case generally broke down, and the offender went free. Not one criminal had been executed, yet it was notorious that at least one hundred murders had been committed within the space of a few months in the city limits, while instances of arson, burglary, theft and robbery were so daily occurrence. The carnival of crime had truly assumed a fearful and alarming shape. The city had five times been almost entirely destroyed by fire, and it had become absolutely unsafe to walk the streets after dark. A regularly organized band of these cut-throats was known to exist, with its headquarters in San Francisco, and branches in every town and principal mining-camp in the State. In the spring of 1849 the people had risen en masse and made an effort to crush them out, but the means adopted were too mild to subdue the "hounds." Although they were for a time dispersed and their organization disbanded, it continued to exist, and, at the time of which we write, was a numerous and powerful band, with a permanent place and regular time of holding meetings. A systematized code of signals, passwords and signs had been adopted. It was officered and led by some of the most desperate and clever scoundrels that ever infested a community, many of whom were prominent men of the city. The place of meeting was at the house of one Jim Edwards, on the south side of Pacific street, between Montgomery and Sansome, in the heart of "Sidneytown," the name by which that portion of the city around Clark's point was then known. The front room on the ground floor of Edwards's house was occupied as a saloon for dancing, drinking and gambling, the upper floor was divided into small apartments and let as bedrooms to the frequenters of the place, or to unlucky strangers who, either by chance should wander that way, or were enticed thither by the decoy ducks employed for that purpose, and who if they ever left it alive did so minus cash, jewelry and often even clothing. The rear portion of the building extended out over the water of the bay, which at that time had not been filled in as it now is, and rested on piles driven into the mud. The floor was pierced at a sufficient height above the water to enable a small boat to pass at any state of the tide. The rear room was the regular rendezvous of "The Thugs." Here were concocted those diabolical schemes that rendered them so famous, and which finally drew down upon them the vengeance of an exasperated and outraged people, and led to their extermination five years later by that last great uprising of the long-suffering citizens of the town.

By an ingenious contrivance in the floor of this apartment, ingress and egress could at any time be had. By rowing a boat underneath and touching a short lever of wood fastened to one of the piles, a trap-door flew open and a ladder descended that led up through the floor into the "Thug's Den," which, after being used, was so effectually closed as to leave no trace of its existence. It was to one of these detectives of the Vigilance Committee, about this time, that they were in pursuit one night of a boat that was known to contain three of the gang within their wanted. The detective's boat was closely astern, and gaining on the fugitives when they, since the extreme difficulty of taking the law in their own hands, and it is, as a general thing, a dangerous precedent to establish anywhere. The detective's boat was closely astern, and gaining on the fugitives when they shot into the entrance leading to the cave, and disappeared like phantom boats. The empty boat was picked up, but no traces of its occupants could be seen where he seen, and it was thought then that they had been drowned, but it was afterward ascertained that they escaped through the mean- just described. One of them was afterward hanged by the committee, one was killed in the scrimmage while attempting to escape from an officer; of the third nothing is definitely known.

There was one other mode only of entrance to this apartment, and that was by a door opening into the back room of the adjoining building, which was occupied by an old Jew named Jacob Smart, whose cheap sign on the front door indicated that his business was that of a gold-dust buyer and money-broker, but who, in reality, was the agent of the Thugs in disposing of their stolen goods, and in giving them the tip whenever a rich customer presented himself at his counter to dispose of his treasure. It was never clearly ascertained that old Jacob ever directly assisted in robbery, but by his management many unsuspecting strangers were led into the clutches of their pitiless foes. Any one, in entering this back room, would have seen the same identical bird, and the truthful old Jew would have replied, "I say:

"Coming down this morning I saw my first robin."

The merchant took him by the arm, led him into a doorway, and earnestly said:

"See here, John, we've been friends for fifteen years."

"Yes."

"And I've lent you money and always spoken well of you, haven't I?"

"You have."

"Well, now, for Heaven's sake don't go into lying for a regular thing! It's well enough to tie once in a while, but don't make a practice of it!"

"But I did see a robin!" exclaimed the distressed citizen.

"Oh, come now!"

"But I did!"

"Then farewell, John!" sighed the merchant. "I've got my family to care for, my store to run, and I can't be ren talking to any such person."

The citizen saw a robin. It was a live robin—an early bird. And yet he did n dare tell another soul of it. In fact, when asked if he hadn't seen a robin around, he dealed flatly.—Detroit Free Press.

DRY EARTH treatment for ulcers has been found very successful. Large, sloughy ulcers, after being washed, were covered with a thick layer of earth, over which a piece of wet paper was placed as a support, the whole being neatly bandaged. In a few days the ulcers began to clear, and when the surfaces looked healthy and granulating, a dressing made as follows was used: A piece of muslin the size of the ulcer was hampered in cerate of the proportion of one part to two parts cocoanut oil); with this the sore was covered, and over that dry cloth was placed, and then moistened with a bandage. In a short time the healing process manifested itself satisfactorily, while all odor was entirely removed.—Scientific American.

BELLE'S VALENTINE.

AS WALTER-sore said, there was never any telling what Belle might take it into her head to do next, but the thing she did do after her return from Lakeside was quite out of the ordinary and surprising, and Walter had to confess his astonishment over it.

Ever since old Mr. Fisher bought her blackberries and took care of her on that memorable expedition from Lakeside, Belle had cherished quite a friendship for him, and though, as Lettie used to say, "Mr. Fisher did not understand children at all," he liked Belle and petted her in a kind though puzzled fashion.

But indeed, how could the good man be expected to understand children! He had never married, but lived all alone in a large, old-fashioned house in the very town where Belle and Letty lived. As he was grandma's friend the young members of the family seldom saw him, and Belle had not made his acquaintance until they met at Lakeside. Now she and Letty used sometimes to walk down the street with him if they met him in their place, and once or twice he had asked them into his dark old house and ridden his housekeeper give them some cake. The children were left with polite thanks, but afterward Belle told Marion

"I wasn't very nice and plumsky like our cake. I shouldn't wonder but the woman hadn't any good receipt."

"She has no family of little folks to eat it is a hurry while it is fresh," said Marion.

"Perhaps she made this when Mr. Fisher was a little boy; it tasted very dry," said Belle, pensively.

Marion smiled, but soon looked so grave that Belle nestled her brown head into her sister's lap and asked:

"Are you thinking badness, Marion? You look so uncomfortable."

"No I, pet! I was thinking about some one else who is uncomfortable, I fear, or who will be so soon."

"Tell me, please," said Belle.

"It is poor little Jamie Benjamin, Belle. His mother is sick and will soon leave Jamie alone, and then I do not know what will become of the poor boy."

"Bring him here to live," said Belle, promptly.

"Papa has enough to support now," said Marion, gravely. "He is not rich enough to do all the good we would like, and we must divide our charities so as to accomplish the most we can. Perhaps I can get Jamie a place; only he is small, delicate and rather dull, so it will be hard to find one."

"What, what, what!" said Mr. Fisher, and it was all he could say. Jamie's unusual situation did not help the matter much; but Mr. Fisher got an inkling of the truth and retired to his room, looking as if he had been struck. Then Jamie, who curled up on the stairs and went to sleep, quite sure that in this remarkable way his troubles were over.

Belle was somewhat surprised to be called from her studying in Marion's room the next morning, when she met her grandma, mamma and Marion sitting in solemn conclave with Mr. Fisher over her sister's writing-desk.

"What does it all mean, dear?" asked Marion, gently.

"Well, Marion, you said we could not afford to keep Jamie ourselves, and Mr. Fisher could, so I thought he better take him for a valentine, and take care of him. You know grandma said he was going to waste because he hadn't anybody to care for, and I thought he'd like to have one to love and keep, you know. And if he don't he's very stingy," added Belle, with a burst of tears.

"Most extraordinary child!" said Mr. Fisher, while Marion tried to soothe the ex-ited little sister.

Belle had to be reproved for her misguided attempt to teach an older person his duty, but she had not meant to be rude, and Mr. Fisher appeared not to mind her. It did not end so badly, because, though Mr. Fisher would not keep Jamie —indeed, he seemed alarmed at the idea of a child in the house!—he did offer to put him to school for two years, and then find him employment if he proved trusty.

And Mrs. Dudley, Jamie's landlady, was very penitent and very ashamed, and promised never to do anything more without consulting Belle's wise head. So I say, do the very next absurd thing that pops into her funny little head.—Christian Union.

A Father's Lesson to His Son.

ONE day Robert's father saw him playing with some other boys who were rude and unmannerly. He had observed for some time a change for the worse in his son, and he knew the cause. He was very sorry, but he said nothing to Robert at the time. In the evening he brought from the garden six rosy-cheeked apples, put them on a plate, and presented them to Robert. He was much pleased at his father's kindness, and thanked him. "You may lay them aside for a few days, that they may become mellow," said the father, and Robert cheerfully placed the plate with the apples in his mother's store-room.

Just as he was putting them aside, his father laid on the plate a seventh apple, which was quite rotten, and desired him to allow it to remain there.

"Indeed, father!" said Robert, "the rotten apple will spoil all the others!"

"Do you think so? Why should not fresh apples rather make the rotten one fresh?" asked his father. And with these words he shut the door of the room.

Eight days afterward he asked his son to open the door and take out the apples. But what a sight presented itself! The six apples which had been at first round and rosy-cheeked were now quite rotten, and spread a bad smell through the room.

"Father," cried he, "did I not tell you that the rotten apples would spoil the good ones? You did not listen to me."

"My boy," said the father, "have I not told you that the company of bad children will make you bad? Yet you do not listen to me. See in the state of the apples that which will happen to you, if you keep company with wicked boys."

Robert did not forget the lesson. When any bad boys asked him to play with them, he thought of the rotten apples, and kept himself apart from them.

Spring Bonnets.

Now spring bonnets begin to arrive at wholesale millinery establishments. The first importations are a study in variety, as scarcely any two shapes seem exactly alike. Milliners complain that it is amusing to be with bonnets as with coiffures—a different style is required for each head; and this season the basis is the high gypsy, variously there are both large and small bonnets, flaring fronts and close caps, square crowns and round crowns, and finally the long-pointed bonnets with curtains reappear, but these are so elaborately looking that they are not very well received. The one distinctive feature of the new stock is the high effect given to all, whether by a crown or a raised front. The material is very light chip, either cream, white or black. The probability is that the popular shape for young ladies' bonnets will be the silk; these are always one color, but are prettily varied; thus there are tiny cheeks of cream, blue and rose, or of light drab with blue or cardinal, or of blue, rose and sarron, or else there are three times of blue or of rose, or perhaps there is white with blue or with pink or with rose, or it may be merely white with black. Other very choice ribbons have chilled blocks, with the twill in the ears. The crown may be round, though it is newer to have it very positively square. There is very little room for trimming on such bonnets, though there are two long streamers of ribbon floating behind and extending far below the waist. An extreme shape among new bonnets has a large high crown, with a coronet front, that rolls very much higher on one side than the other, while the back has a sort of flat fluted cornice of the chip. This curtain is about two inches deep, and is indented in two or three large scallops; similar cornices appear on other bonnets of different shapes. Another bonnet, with ample crown and close ears, has a large cape of the chip, which we have had a reason to complain of late that no provision was made for them.

Round hats show very little novelty in shape. The most graceful is the Alsacian, a square brim projecting far over the eyes in front to protect them well, while the sides and back are turned upward. This shape is worn with a large bow of ribbon, with soft and dry cotton crapes that will not sulge off dry. Tulle will make old furniture in new shapings. Another round crowned Derby lasts such as we now wear. Tuscan hats are shown in variegated, soft as well as white straw. The shapes are the same as those worn by gentlemen, but the ribbons are more elaborate. Some have a plain ribbon band, with a jar or jug well mixed, and afterward kept tightly corked. This is a valuable recipe.—Harper's Bazar.

Watering House Plants.

The English Garden is inclined to dispute the rule that warm water should be used in moderately small quantities, and supplied frequently. It discusses the failure where plants were cultivated in windows were intimately intermingled, the action of watering would be found to be the principal cause. A plant grown in a room is unnatural until it is in a fit condition to receive a liberal supply of that element. Loving gardeners secure a good drain age, in order that all superabundant water may be quickly carried off. Those who are constantly drinking a moderately small quantity of water upon their plants will not have them in a flourishing condition for any length of time. This must be obvious to all, for it is quite evident that the moderately small quantity of water frequently given would keep the surface of the soil moist, while at the same time, from the effects of the good drainage, which is essential to the well being of all plants in an artificial state, all the lower roots would perish for want of water, and the plant would become sickly and eventually die. In many instances when the contents of the pots are well sprinkled daily with water, the soil in the middle will become hard and dry. When the ball of earth becomes dry, it not always a long time to penetrate it, and surface waterings no one accomplish the object. In this case set the pot in a pail of water, and let it soak until the earth is thoroughly saved through. It proper care in the requests always to give water in to induce a proper growth, then the plant must be repotted with fresh earth, and have a portion of its roots cut back. Irregularities in shape must be corrected from time to time by pinching off the shoots which may start to grow out of place.

The red sphier is quite a favorite to mistletoe; the green fly, however, likes it, but may be destroyed sopradily by tobacco smoke that only will not injure it, nor suffer from this cause. The mealy bug is so large that it may be securely picked off. Winter is the season to prune evergreens, and while the plant must not suffer from lack of moisture, the roots must not be kept saturated with water. The drainage of the pot when struck by the knuckles is quite different from when it is when dry. This, and the lagging look of the plant, will indicate that water is needed. A little practice will soon enable one to anticipate the wants of the plant and to supply water at the proper time.

Cure of Stork.

MRS who own thorough-bred stock of any breed usually give them that careful attention which success in the undertaking requires. To such men advice upon the subject under consideration is of little value; but it plain, straight-forward counsel will have any visible influence with many stock owners in the great dairy regions of Ohio and adjoining States, it ought to be set before them with a lavish hand. A single day's journey through the country is sufficient to convince any man that the majority of our farmers are guilty, not only of such negligence as amounts to loss to themselves, but of absolute cruelty to their domestic animals. They do not seem to realize what they lose every year for want of exercising a little more reason. They don't stop to reason, but go on and perform their work in the same manner they after day, regardless of circumstances. I was lately talking with two farmers—near neighbors—in regard to the returns which they received from their dairy cows. One of these men, whom we will call Mr. B., said: "I milked nine cows last season, and they only made me $135. Some of my neighbors figure up far better results, but I don't know how they do it."

Mr. B. milked the same number of cows, sent his milk to the same factory, and received $135, or a difference of $240, and this margin was mostly made by the difference in cows which the two dairies received during the winter and early spring months. Many a farmer will purchase a cow that lets him giving 5,000 pounds of milk each season for one or three years, and keep her for a term of years that will yield 10,000 pounds, and perhaps more. He is surprised as well as disappointed, but he has himself to blame. She was formerly owned by a man who took good care of his cattle instead of allowing them to do as they pleased, and consequently she happened to be most conveniently, regardless of cold and storm. Many a farmer has read or heard that it is more economical to stable dairy cows, and as the winter progresses some attempt is made to induce a proper growth, then the plant must be repotted with fresh earth, and have a portion of its roots cut back. Irregularities in shape must be corrected from time to time by pinching off the shoots which may start to grow out of place.

The secret of success in this matter is to begin with teaching. It is the worst point of all professions, so it paid that it usually drives the lower grades as a sanctuary, still, a stepping-stone to something else, and women with other aims in view. As long as we put to our teachers lower wages than we pay to our skilled workmen, we cannot blame them if they crain the children's heads with chaff of words and leave no time for the study of the soil, which is the only true basis of education.

There are two ways. Little Mrs. B., a veritable descendant of Grandgrind, drills the children every night in their next day's lessons. They were restless and dull until they can repeat verbatim Latin, and dull rooms and listless faces. She will not have a girl, neither must she have a boy, never their work to do, how are we to do it?

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

In any family will, for a season, keep an account of the value of the products used from their garden, at the price at which they are furnished at the nearest grocery, they will certainly be astonished at the amount they have saved, aside from their increased freshness and quality.—Root's Garden Manual.

MISSUS SYDDOR CAKE.—Three eggs, one and a half cups white sugar, beat eggs two minutes and add sugar. Beat two minutes. One cup of flour, one teaspoon cream tartar. Sift one minute; one half cup cold water, one-half teaspoon soda. Beat one minute. Add teaspoon lemon and cup of flour. Beat one minute.

HOW TO MAKE THE TEA GO FURTHER.—A method has been discovered for making more than the usual quantity of tea from any given quantity of the leaf. The whole secret consists in steaming the leaf before steeping. By this process, it is said, fourteen pints of good quality may be brewed from one ounce of tea.

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, possessing the most wonderful power in the cure of wounds, bruises, burns, and inflammations of those powerful Vegetable Extracts was the Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended the use of this Ointment in the cure of diseases otherwise incurable, is the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a full and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and where the nerves have not been entirely destroyed a compelling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is exercised by the magic sensation of its purifying and healing influence. Such power is really with internal as external disease.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammatory Rheumatism.

No patient ever used dis with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most effective remedy ever prepared. For Sprains or Pains Sore Throat it is unequaled.

For Neuralgia, Nervousness, Sciatica, Lumbago, Diseased Joint Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Chapped Nipples, Agues in the Breast, Felons, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Risings, Sores, etc., will be immediately relieved by the power of the Magnetic Ointment.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss. At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Charlevoix, held at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, on the [illegible] day of February, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six.

Present, Hon. Wm. Beck, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Wagner, late of the township of Charlevoix, in said county deceased.

On reading and filing the petition duly verified of Lambert Wells, administrator of said estate, praying for reasons therein set forth for an order authorizing and empowering him to sell the real estate of said deceased.

Thereupon it is ordered, that Monday the [illegible] day of March next, at the office of the Probate Court in the village of Charlevoix, in said county, be and is hereby appointed for hearing said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the time and place of hearing said petition, and show cause why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted, and that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county of Charlevoix, three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

An Old Fable Reversed:

A splendid revival of religion has been in progress at Marshall, in this State, for the past few weeks, under the charge of the usual 25 dozen churches of the city, aided by Rev. Mr. Graves, a revivalist of the Moody sort. The success of the movement has been great: it seemed to be carried by the zealots of those who were embraced the Christian religion.

During the progress of the revival, Mr. Thomas, of this city, under Divine guidance and inspiration, has been directing a train of criticism against the movement, which differs in quality but not in keenness from that which emanated in past years from the pens of Voltaire, Paine, and others of their kind. As a result, he finds himself in the midst of a storm of invective!

A fable-writer relates that a stupid and timid chicken in her terror, hurting his wing badly, fixed what he supposed to be the mortal blow to a hen. In the darkness she did not see that the donkey was a tiger. He crushed upon the beast, and he fell to the earth and pummelled it with his donkey; whereat the tiger, from pure astonishment, submitted to be led off and tied up in a stall. Next morning the discovery that the chicken-hawker had only caught the dangerous beast with his hoofs drawn all the poison-fangs from the tiger and his claws were pared down to the quick and his carnivorous teeth filed to the latter make, and poor Thomas a boot of his own and a fish-monger's fate thereafter.

While the Hesden fable reversed, a more supposed wisdom is beautifully developed in the Statement of Liberty in positive and altogether foolish and upon unwarranting akin to that of the Pentecost, whom was mocked of the Athenians in the belief that he has called a tiger, the sunlight of public opinion reveals an ass, and that an ass of the donkey's own shadow.

We confess to a similarity of belief with that of the editor regarding the extent of Divine power as claimed to be exercised in many of the enthusiastic expressions common to periods of this nature; but we look upon the surplus zeal as the human part of it, and dare not exclude the possibility that germs of heavenly are planted. They may not at grass and flourish, but what poor, grovelling human shrub object to their having planted?

Eighteen centuries have borne the testimony of our Lord Jesus Christ, and testified to the fact that He introduced a new Religion to the world. One would think, therefore, that Christianity had had long enough among men to exhibit its distinctive power. It has for ages occupied the eye of mankind as the brightest and most urgent concern within the compass of human thought and looking merely at the aspect of the position, one feel impelled to inconceivable that it ought to be far beyond [illegible]. So it would be, if it were left to the cool and quiet like men. Who [illegible] Spectator, Shakspeare or Milton? The Statesman would [illegible] a monument to the glory of either of them. Back Christ with them, and suppose that these as merely a noble character, a good man and a great teacher in any ground the world has ever seen: its instants in honoring Him as it has other illustrious characters. And [illegible] tendency the Great Source, referred to the opinions of its Gospel divine sentiments. We regard a threat at the legitimate proposition of His truths as a thing as Him and His religion, and [illegible] from the moral arm of the agnostic we have had it all the [illegible] of an angelic host! Yes a thousand [illegible].

The Statesman imbibes the digestive which in forty years of daily service [illegible] it in assuming any agency of religious dissemination, because to [illegible] either its certain [illegible] shows [illegible] such matters. Does the Statesman's sting [illegible] We have [illegible] of those who close their [illegible] and greatest, and the great Divine Plan left and least.

THE NEWS.

AN official dispatch has been issued in Russia, forbidding women to carve for the fortifications or barricades.

GEORGE C. SMITH, formerly President of the bankrupt Chicago State Insurance Company, was arrested in New Jersey a few days since on the charge of swindling, and held to bail in the sum of $100,000.

THE Vance Railroad bill, which requires many of the distinctive features of the Pacific Railroad bill, passed both houses of the Wisconsin Legislature. The vote on its passage in the Senate on the 19th stood Ayes 29 noes 7.

A DISPATCH dispatch of the 23d says that Searle, despite the advice of the great pioneer, continued belligerent and threatened to discharge was against Turkey when an opposition occasion arrived.

A VIENNA dispatch reports that great floods had lately occurred in Upper Austria, over 120 houses having been washed away and destroyed.

HON. D. P. BARNWELL, a former Representative in Congress from the Oswego and Oneida (N. Y.) District, died at Oswego on the 24th.

A CAVE in the orchards at Altona, N. Y., on the 23d, destroyed eight buildings and about 40,000 bales of hay. Loss estimated at $25,000. On the 24th, the large frame factory of the Lamson & Goodnow Manufacturing Company, at Westhaven, Ct., was burned. Loss estimated at $200,000. Between 400 and 500 workmen were thrown out of employment. The Holland woolen mill at Lowell, Mc., was also destroyed by fire, on the 25th. Loss nearly $100,000.

A CONVICT must be come of the 21st, says Judge Williams, are arraigning at that point for the East and West and departing for the Rock Hills daily. A Yankton (Dakota) telegram on the same date says that snow was full of rain, and others were constantly arriving, who were flying out there, expecting to get to the Black before the breaking up of the storms.

THE preliminaries of peace between Egypt and Abyssinia have been arranged. The last of the French political prisoners were received on the 23d. The members elect of the Chamber of Deputies are classified as follows: 363 Republicans, 208 Conservatives Republicans, 75 Bonapartists, 61 Legitimists, 26 Conservatives. Reimposition act as provides a day for resumption, asking Congress to let the currency alone, neither expanding nor contracting it, being satisfied that the financial troubles will heal themselves if left to the operations of the natural laws of trade and commerce, and one indorsing President Grant and his Administration, particularly for his removal of officers suspected of dishonesty, and prosecuting the guilty ones, so that no guilty man should escape. The nominations were then read in turn, and others were constantly arriving, who were flying out there, expecting to get to the Black before the breaking up of the storms.

THE Democratic National Committee met in Washington on the 23d, and selected St. Louis as the place and the 27th of January as the time for holding the National Convention.

THE anniversary of Washington's birthday was celebrated in Chicago by the closing of all the Government offices; the annual meeting of the oldest Washington's Association, and the parade of the Fire Department, which passed in review before the President at the Executive Mansion. The day was also observed in New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, and other Eastern and Western cities.

THERE was great excitement at Catskill, N. Y., on the 23d, growing out of a dispute between a Catholic clergyman and a portion of his congregation about the interment in a Catholic cemetery of the body of Joseph White, who was hanged nearly two years ago. The body was originally buried in the White burial lot, the clergyman had recently given permission to inter it in the cemetery, and the people resisted. The Richmond Light Infantry.

A MASS Greenback Convention was held at New Haven, Conn., on the 23d, at which several speakers were made and resolutions adopted favoring the immediate repeal of the Resumption act, and the adoption of the greenback as the currency of the country, to be interchangeable with bonds bearing a low rate of interest. Delegates were appointed to the National Convention at Indianapolis on the 15th of May.

THE New York Republican State Convention is to be held at Syracuse on the 23d of March, to elect delegates to the National Convention.

THE Republicans of Rhode Island have nominated the following State ticket: For Governor, Albert C. Howard; Lieutenant Governor, Alfred B. Chadsey; Secretary of State, Joshua M. Addeman; Attorney-General, Warren R. Peirce; State Treasurer, A. D. Vose.

THE Republican State Convention of Wisconsin was held on the 23d, at Madison. Delegates to the National Convention were selected, and a State Electoral ticket was nominated. The platform contains a resolution declaring that the currency of the nation should, as soon as consistent with business interests and safety, be made equal to gold, and until that time should continue as a legal tender. A resolution was also adopted declaring it inexpedient to instruct the delegates to the National Convention as to a candidate for the Presidency, but expressing a belief that the Republicans of the State were emphatically in favor of the Hon. James G. Blaine.

THE Indiana Republican State Convention met at Indianapolis on the 25th. Among the resolutions adopted was one demanding a repeal of so much of the Resumption act as provides a day for resumption, asking Congress to let the currency alone, neither expanding nor contracting it, being satisfied that the financial troubles will heal themselves if left to the operations of the natural laws of trade and commerce, and one indorsing President Grant and his Administration, particularly for his removal of officers suspected of dishonesty, and prosecuting the guilty ones, so that no guilty man should escape. Gen. Babcock on Trial.

ELEVENTH DAY.

Gil. Broadhead, began the closing argument, reviewing the evidence at great length, and insisting that the testimony and the telegrams produced in the trial all tended to connect the defendant with the conspiracy to defraud the revenue. He claimed that the letter-carrier Magill was a manufactured accomplice, gotten up for the purpose of offsetting the damaging testimony given by Everest. The counsel closed with the admonition that the jury be not influenced by the consideration of position, but that it may found that corruption omitted within the White House they crush it out.

Mr. Storrs, on behalf of the defense, reviewed the testimony, and argued to the accusing up of 7:05. Broadhead. He said nothing had been adduced to prove the defendant guilty, but that the prosecution had battled the jury to assume a crime that had not been proven. Mr. Storrs was obliged to suspend his remarks because of sickness, and the court adjourned.

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. Storrs, for the defense, resumed his address to the jury on the morning of the 21st, and spoke continuously until the session closed for the day—a period of nine hours altogether. He occupied the attention mainly to an analysis and exposition of the telegrams purporting to have passed between Gen. Babcock and Joyce and McDonald, endeavoring to show that they were all examples of an explanation compatible with the theory of the entire innocence of the defendant. Being disposed of the telegrams to his own satisfaction, Mr. Storrs took up the conspiracy theory, and, in the course of his able reasoning, which, when the newspaper would not insist with a golden of spirits in which the prosecution had no interest, he answered the several points in the indictment, and in connection with the character of its counsel was.

Judge Hilton read the instructions to the jury when they came together on the morning of the 24th. They were quite lengthy, and included various charges the telegrams and many of the letters introduced in evidence. He also read the notice, in which two main questions arose, one as to the relevance of the conspiracy, and the other as to the connection of the defendant with it. The first question was evidently submitted by both sides, as the charge was given in accordance with the views of the defendant's counsel. The second question was evidently submitted by both sides, as the charge was given in accordance with the views of the defendant's counsel.

A SLEEPING-CAR on the Harlem Railroad extension was thrown from the track by a broken rail, near Wingdale, Dutchess, on the night of the 23d, rolled down an embankment, caught fire and was burned up. There were ten passengers on the car, none of whom were killed. C. D. Russell, proprietor of the Sherman House, Chicago, and his son—were burned to death. Nearly all the other passengers in the car were more or less injured, but none fatally. Mr. Russell's son, a lad seventeen years old, was an orphan of the sleeping-car. The father got out, but hearing the cries of his son, went back to save him, and was promptly crushed.

THE Ohio Prohibitionists met in Convention at Columbus, on the 25th, and nominated the following State ticket: For Secretary of State, H. S. Peterson; Judge of the Supreme Court, D. W. Among the resolutions adopted was one declaring that the question of prohibition shall be submitted to all adult citizens of Ohio, irrespective of sex.

BENJAMIN BUTLER commenced the closing argument on the morning of the 24th. He remembered the case as a remarkable one, and the counsel the defense as still more remarkable, and opened the counsel for the defense of trying to drag the President into it needlessly and groundlessly. The Executive Department of the Government, he said, could commit crime by instinct as by command, but the law would not allow it. Counsel commenced their testimony as to what was that of any other witness, and the counsel for the defense bringing the President into the case was to influence the Republican party. He consid

CANNED fruits, chow-chow, pickles, club fish, and honey at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

A NEW CRAFT FOR LITTLE TRAVERSE BAY.—A few days since Mr. Chrysler, of Little Traverse, purchased of the Detroit River Steamboat Company, the small steamer M. W. Wright, for which he paid $4,000. Mr. Chrysler will employ her in trade in Little Traverse Bay and vicinity. The boat is in good order, and only needs the usual fitting out to be ready for season's work. She will be taken to her new home as soon as navigation opens.

LADIES', gent's, boy's misses' and children's fine shoes in great variety just received at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

HARBOR MATTERS.—As yet nothing is definitely known concerning the action of the Committee on Commerce with reference to the appropriations for our harbor improvements. It was thought at one time a few days ago that the Committee did not duly appreciate the magnitude of the lake commerce, and would practice a parsimonious policy in regard to the lake harbor improvements. Later advices, however, state that the committee is nearly ready to report, and Michigan is, under the circumstances, quite liberally dealt with. She will get in all about $450,000.

A MATTER OF DUTY.—It is the solemn duty of every grocer to refrain from selling to his customers an article of food which he knows is positively injurious to the health, and he is deprived of all excuse for so doing when a better article for the purpose can be readily obtained at the same cost. Now the Best Chemical Substitute, made by D. B. DeLand & Co., can always be had, and this is known to be pure, and free from all deleterious matter. No grocer who regards the welfare of his customers will fail to keep it.

GENERAL BELKNAP.

Terrible Disgrace of the Secretary of War

On the 4th inst., the House of Representatives unanimously adopted resolutions asking the Senate to impeach General Belknap, Secretary of War. The cause of this action is the astounding revelation that the Secretary has been, during a period of four years, excepting bribes for appointments to post traderships on the frontier. The evidence is so plain and damning that Belknap is irretrievably ruined. On learning that a committee had been appointed to investigate the matter, he tendered his resignation to the President, who, for knowing the extent of the charges, accepted it. This does not save him from the disgrace of impeachment, and he is now being prosecuted against as a criminal—he being now in the custody of the police. No disposition on the part of the President or Republican members of Congress is manifested to shield him, and the entire country is heartily indignant at the man who has so foully disgraced himself and the nation. Let him suffer to the fullest extent of the law.

WHITE and check shirts at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.—The following appointments for Quarterly Meetings have been made in this county. Charlevoix, May 27-28; Indian Mission same; Cheboygan, May 13-14; South Arm, May 9; Norwood, May 6 7.

THE NORTHERN ROUTE.—The entire line of the Northern Transportation Company's boats have been sold at receiver's sale, and have been purchased by Mr Chamberlain, the former manager of the company. It is proposed now to start them out in the spring on a line between Chicago and Oswego, instead of to Ogdensburgh as heretofore.

TRADE with Carpenter & Bartholomew, save money and go to the Centennial: take your whole family.

SOUTH ARM EXPERIENCE.—Our inclinations led us to the head of South Arm, last week, in quest of lake trout, which, it was said, were being caught in great numbers through the ice. We formed one of a select and dignified (?) quartet of gentlemen from the village. The leader of our party—one Miller, surnamed "Tip," for short, caught three monstrous trout, and we caught once—that is, we purchased one of a lucky Indian. We all went to fish, but the substance of our experience was all concentrated in the little word, FUN! While there we enjoyed the hospitality of Jesse Weikel and his lady, and were treated right royally. Unprecedentedly, we found ourselves on Friday evening at E. A. H. Cole's, where the people were congregating from all directions to attend one of the famous South Arm dances. In the evening several other Charlevoix citizens arrived, and they just made that thing "lively." The Charlevoix crowd, ourself excepted, danced about every set. Jack had to stomp and dodge rafters, but the way he and Tip jerked the South Arm gals on around that hall would have astonished their fellow-citizens at home. A dignified ex-Probate Judge candidate who resides in another part of that town, was also there, but the presence of Mrs. ex-candidate prevented his joining with the Charlevoix gentlemen in any of their demonstrations. But we will leave this trivial topic. On the west side of the Arm S. G. Isaman and E. A. H. Cole have each a store and dock, and both are getting out some wood. On the opposite side, Mr. W. F. Empey has a fine large store building enclosed, and is just now engaged in building a substantial pile dock. At Mr. Weikel's farm, a short distance from the Arm, the owner has a trout pond, and has already over a thousand speckled beauties, which have been propagated from the fifteen original fish, which were placed there about five years ago. He has them graded in separate divisions. We were greatly pleased to note the improvement in progress everywhere in the vicinity of the "Head."

QUERY.—Why is it a portion of the people of this vicinity seem to be prospering and do not complain of hard times? Answer, They buy their goods at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

CROSS VILLAGE, MICH., Mar 8, 1876.

Editor Sentinel :—

With a fair wind and prospects of a good run, I once more get under weigh, having in tow a few items which I will cut adrift one by one during the trip. Everything seems dead since the late thaw, it having put a veto on sleighriding and wood hauling, and, at present, there can hardly be found snow enough in the village to make a football.

The streets were filled with water, filling up also nearly every cellar here. The mammoth cellars under the Convent buildings were filled, but by pumping night and day the water was kept down in the main cellar, where between 3,000 and 4,000 bushels of potatoes were stored. Damage slight.

Notwithstanding the thaw, no less than ten double teams left here to day for Petoskey, via the State Road, to get the machinery for the mill lately erected here—the Messrs. Hohr having a saw mill, and Father Weikamp, of the Convent, a saw and grist-mill. There will be plenty of building material to be had here hereafter.

Last week we were pleased to meet with Mr. H. O. Rose, of Petoskey, and Mr. Hinman, agent of the G. R. & I. R. R. Co., they being here, as I understand, negotiating for some lands owned by parties here, for the M. E. State Camp grounds.

State Road Commissioner Haviland was also here on business connected with the State Road to Little Traverse. A petition was lately sent in from here to have that road made "navigable," and which he says can be made so at very little expense. He speaks favorably of it, and soon we can look for a good, short road to the "outside world," avoiding the long and innumerable hills which have to be crossed and crossed, in going by the old road; also effecting a reduction of travel about eight miles. If ever the Board of Control did a good thing it will do the better one by opening to us this road.

At present we have here a Mr. Merritt, from Battle Creek, who is to superintend the putting up of the machinery in the Rohr Bros. Mill. We have also Messrs. Miller and Hunsberger, the prosperous young Sewing Machine agents. They are bound for the Upper Peninsula with a load. Bon voyage. One evening during their late trip here, there was an exciting foot-race between Miller and our Teutonic blacksmith. There was "something in the wind" which was not suitable to either party—hence the race. I dare not tell what it was, but probably George will; ask him. You will tell them the cause, won't you George?

Our friend Headmont, who was so severely injured a few weeks since, is around again, apparently as well as ever.

Hallo! Here I am becalmed, out of sight of everything. Nevertheless, I will keep a good lookout, so that if anything noteworthy floats by, I will make fast to it until I can send it to you.

YOURS,

LEVI A. THAN.

We take the following items from the Northern Tribune (Cheboygan):

POINT ST. IGNACE.—The residents of Point St. Ignace are considerably elated over the lately developed prospects of the Mackinaw and Marquette railroad. Should the railroad have a terminus at the Point, it would doubtless soon become a place of considerable importance.

—We understand that Mr. J. A. T. Wendell, of Mackinaw, has contracted for the erection of a flouring mill near Mackinaw City. It is to be completed at an early day after navigation opens. This will be a great convenience to the homesteaders who are rapidly settling in that part of the country. Mr. Wendell also expects to have a road cut out from Brutus, north to the mill.

—MILITARY TO BE INCREASED.—Advices have been received at the Island which seem to render it certain that the garrison at that place will be increased by the addition of another company. The increase is made for the purpose of commencing the improvements upon the National Park. It is expected that most of the labor will be done by the soldiers, they being put upon detached duty for that purpose. We are glad to note that the improvements upon the Park are to be commenced this season. The new company is expected to arrive at an early day.

THE NEWS.

A ROME (Italy) telegram of the 27th says the signature of the King had been forged to a bill for $50,000 drawn by Marquis Mantegazza, who had been arrested, and had stated that other forged bills for greater amounts were in circulation.

A SCHNEIDER (Germany) dispatch of the 26th says fourfifths of the coal required in that region. In that town water had entered 700 houses, most of which had been flooded to the roofs, giving the inhabitants only time to escape from the attics. Over thirty houses had been washed away. The newspapers were appealing for contributions for the sufferers.

IT was officially announced in Madrid on the 26th that eight Carlist battalions had crossed to the royalists at Pampeluna, and that after a conflict with the officers, the force had been disbanded and surrendered. The disarmament of the Carlists in France had led to the discovery of a large number of Prussian deserters, who would be conveyed under guard to the French authorities. Madrid dispatches of the 27th say that the Carlist troops near Lecumberi had killed Gen. Egaina, their commander, and solicited amnesty. It was reported that Don Carlos had crossed over into French territory on the night of the 26th, and there issued a manifesto in which he stated he generously relinquished the struggle in order to promote the happiness of the Spanish people.

A BERLIN dispatch of the 27th says Austria had ordered the Herzegovinian refugees in Dalmatia to return to their homes within a month, or suffer forcible expulsion.

REV. E. C. LANSING, while preaching in Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 27th, fell dead in his pulpit, of heart disease.

A TERRIFIC storm passed on or the town of St Charles, Mo., on the afternoon of the 27th, sweeping the northern part of the city and sweeping everything before it. It only lasted about five minutes, but in that time a large number of buildings were wrecked. James Gosney and his little son were instantly killed, and several other persons were injured. The corn and cotton crops were swept away, residences, farm-buildings and fences. It was thought the damage to property would reach nearly or quite $250,000.

THE steamer Mary Belle, the largest steamer on the Mississippi, was burned to the water's edge at Vicksburg, on the 27th. A large quantity of merchandise, together with all the passengers' baggage, was consumed. The attorney for the owner was present to the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, an order to the effect that the House proceedings were contrary to law, and the action taken was in violation of the Wheeler Compromise, and that the acts of the Governor were fully known to every member of the Senate ate not to be criminal or unlawful; etc. An order of acquittal was then adopted by the Court, by a vote of twenty-five to nine.

THE Redpath sugar refinery at Montreal, Canada, has suspended. Over 300 hands are thrown out of employment.

THE Connecticut Republican State Convention was held at Hartford on the 29th ult., and the following State ticket was placed in nomination: For Governor, Henry C. Robinson; Lieutenant-Governor, Frederick J. Kingsbold; Secretary of State, Francis A. Walker; Treasurer, Jeremiah Bailey; Comptroller, Ithi Curtis. The platform declares that the Republican party is pledged to make greenbacks as good as gold by the bullion, and approves of the Resumption act as a new expression of such pledge and determination. It expresses the belief that it is "the unwritten law of the land which declares it unwise for the Chief Magistrate to hold his office beyond two terms, and we accept the declaration of President Grant, in harmony with this law, as but another claim to our admiration and gratitude."

A MONTGOMERY (Miss.) dispatch of the 29th ult. says advices just received from the Black Hills, dated Feb. 10, report the discovery of hillside diggings which pay from seven to eighteen cents to the pan. None of the creeks in the hills had been prospected to the bedrock owing to the deep snow. Several promising quartz leads had also been discovered.

[From our own Correspondent.]

New York, March 2, 1875.

To the Editor of the SENTINEL:

No one suffered from a sense of humor have failed with shouts of laughter over the consternation that took the community last week upon the receipt of the first telegrams from Washington announcing the most startling exposures of corruption in high places which it recently has pa been called upon to witness. For the moment political differences vanish like smoke before a whirlwind. Our citizens are neither Republicans nor Democrats, Conservatives nor Radicals, nor even Liberals, nor Americans as many of them are; into each other's faces, like some P. see the the ground on which they stood is the building crash of a volcano.

"Under whose feet will the next explosion take place?" is the question that rises in all minds, and as money is already more than doubled as to threatening extension of scandal to the Cabinet of the President of the United States--men whose positions are in power and dignity, next to the moral dignity of many a king, queen, or prince, whose chief duties are to sleep, dream, eat, drink, ride, hunt, or do what one hardly cares to mention. These were none of the usual preparations of the public mind--no vague suspicions, no rumors, no gathering of the storm; it was a word and a blow, and "the first" The accusation, the trial, and the sentence were announced in the same breath, and that terrible word "guilty" hushed the column that gave the first intimation of this new shame.

At this moment the courts are too recent for any one to foretell their exact results, but it is hardly thinkable that impeachment will now, for the first time, be successful as the national sport. And for how painful a view of politics was this splendid forthcoming sell. What smarting, what soul-felt weakness must be his who would save himself, his family, and an honored name, would spread themselves through the army of one of the greatest nations of the earth, and leave the country into the cost and misery of many humiliation for a few thousand dollars! It seems impossible that all these years have been done with any intention of evil, that we may not a man who would upon the edge of such a precipice and realize no danger! He has not even the excuse of the ostrich, who, plunging its head into the desert sand, believes itself safely hidden from its pursuers.

But one explanation of these things remains, and that is, that the standard of public life has in some way become poisonous, and that like the fumes of charcoal, is so dulls and stupefies the senses of those who breathe it that they succumb to influences which, in a normal strength would easily throw off; and the country itself is like a man who, nearly suffocated by the miasmas, lies to be roughly handled, and even to suffer some cruel blows, to be saved from a sleep which might prove endless.

Truly the Centennial year brings with it abundant cause to moderate national transports and humble national pride. But if its tempests have the result of clearing this deadly putrosphere, and letting in the fresh air of rugged honesty to aid in reviving the nation from its moral lethargy, the devastation which they work is as nothing to the benefits they will confer.

With so memorable an Ash Wednesday as the last, Lent ought to be well and mournfully kept. In New York, however, the effect of the Lenten season is getting rather weak, excepting among the extremely High church communion, and even such people will eventually

WHAT MY LOVER SAID.

By the merest chance, in the twilight gloom,
In the orchard path he met me—
In the tall, wet grass, with its faint perfume—
And I tried to pass, but he made no room;
Oh! I tried, but he would not let me!
So I stood and blushed till the grass grew red,
While he took my hand, as he stooping said—
How the clover lifted each pink, sweet head,
To listen to all that my lover said;
Ah! the clover is blooms—I love it!)

In the high, red grass, were the path is hid,
And the low, wet leaves hung over;
But I could not pass upon either side,
For I found myself, when I vainly tried,
In the arms of my steadfast lover.
And he held me there, and he raised my head,
While he took my hand, as he stooping said—
And 'twas sweet down there from the bough-o'er-head
To listen to all that my lover said;
(The clover hung low, the clover red,
To listen to all that my lover said;
Oh! the whispering wind around us!)

He then took a ring from the tip of my finger,
And I felt—or, was I dreaming?—
That I must be all unwilling,
For I tried to say no, and I would have pressed
As the night-wind came with its dew at last,
And the sky with stars was dimmer;
But he pressed me closer when I would have fled,
And he made me hear his story,
And his soft caress cut from his lips and said—
How the stars clung out where the white moon hid
To listen to all that my lover said;
Oh! the whispering wind around us!)

I know how the grass and leaves will not tell,
And I'm sure that the wind's position never—
Will carry his secret to each and all—
That no being shall ever discover
The kind of the song that he softly said
From the merge line of my lover.
Shall never reveal when a fairy-like spell,
They seem round about, in their night to shelter,
In the [illegible] of the [illegible] clover—
Nor echo the whispers that made my heart swell
As they fell from the line of my lover.
(O, it was a true Love's Paradise!)

THE BROKEN PRIMROSES.

A Highland Love Story.

Among all the flowers that make the country beautiful, I think none have such a touch of pathos in memory as the primrose. When ever I passed the months of spring in the country, in childhood, who cannot recall how joyously the first appearance of the favorite was hailed, and its opening watched as its delicate buds peeped from among the thick green leaves under the shade of a bigger bush, or around the roots of a wide branching solefree, or on the tiny shelves of the hoary rock?

To see even a bunch of artificial primroses on a pretty young lady's bonnet seems to me to give a touch of poetry to the wearer's style to see them worn by a matron about to enter into the sere and yellow leaf period looks like the ripe months of September or October wearing the livery of spring. They seem never out of season even on the silvery locks of old age; to an early primrose may blossom on the brow of winter. Dear to our song.

The laird of a certain Highland castle, which we will call Auchaellan, was early left fatherless, but was carefully trained by a very wise, although a doting mother. Ellen was a fine, high-spirited young man, who gave her the very highest satisfaction in all things, excepting in the way, being loth to be lead early formed. He would often dress himself in the strangest disguises and mingle with the peasants, taking a leading share in their games and pastimes. During his strolls he frequently gazed with delight upon such pursuits as that so beautifully delineated in "A Mountain Scene in Scotland"—a view and merriment in the Highlands.

Sir Evan's mother, knowing his high and honorable nature, was never afraid of his coming anything wrong at such times, but she thought his conduct undignified, as she could not win him from this strange habit, she tried to influence him to get married. With this object in view she gathered around her, both in London and at home, all the young belles she most admired, but her efforts seemed in vain. Sir Evan was courteous and attentive to all her guests, but he was still fancy free. For I tired myself, when I vainly tried,
To the arms of my steadfast lover,
And he held me there, and he raised my head,
While he took my hand, as he stooping said—
(How the leaves bent down from the bough-o'er-head
To listen to all that my lover said;
Oh! the whispering wind around us!)

"I dare not say she does, mother," he replied; "yet, I think she thought tenderly of the strolling musician. I think there was a sigh of regret for his not being a son of a neighboring farmer. I could read that in her dark gray eyes, even when she was not the least conscious of it herself."

"God bless you, my dear son," replied the good lady, with a tremor in her voice. "God bless you, indeed, so amiable a maiden must prove a sweet companion, and she must be in a measure accomplished, according to your statement; and if it is for your happiness, I am reconciled."

The young man kissed his mother's hand with tenderness and gratitude; and he went at once to order out his carriage for the interesting journey. He dressed with great care, and a finer-looking man could seldom be seen.

His well-built limbs were lithe and hardy-looking, and showed to the nimble huntsman or the brave soldier, as peculiar slight demand. His dark, hazel eye was beautiful, and his curling hair (he very sunniest shade of brown. His bushy whiskers were auburn, and the habit of command gave a dignity to his presence that heightened the charm of the whole.

Ellen's father saw the carriage approach his house in great superbage, for he knew the great yellow carriage, though he had not seen it for years. He went, bonnet in hand, to meet the laird, while his good wife hastily got on her best cap, and best gown, and her brown, purple green, maize-color, and various gray shades, such as wool-color, cauchouc, Cochineale, Illinois, etc.

The shades for evening silks are clear glace, which is a very lustrous, shimmering blue, mauve, n. mulle), rosy-tinted lavender, sea-foam green, and every shade that has a yellow hue, such as cream, pistle, or straw-color, chair, or flesh, fawn, buff, canary, etc. With these pale grey grains are imported two fabrics of corresponding shades from which to choose over-dresse, viz: brocaded silk and brocaded Chambery gauze.

These shades of white double faille are shown for bridal dresses. These are blanc mat, or dead white; blanc rose, with faint rosy tints; and blanc creme, or the rich cream white like that of syringa and orange blossoms. Double faille has a double twisted chain in the grain, making very rich-looking reps, yet resuming the desired softness.

New importations of black silk show the customers finished silks which are now the first choice by reason of their softness and their subdued luster. The best manufacturers, such as Perrin and Bonnet, have done away with the harsh, heavy stiffness that caused their silks to fall into the most graceful folds, and have given the cashmere finish to all high priced silks made in their factories. There is a sad come reduction in the price of silks. For $1.50 or $1 a yard can be bought rich silks that formerly brought $5 or $6.

The pretty light taffets silks for making simple suits for the spring show new effects in checks and stripes. Thus there are silver-gray grounds barred with black and white—very stylish design. The old contrasts of white with dark brown, blue, or black are also repeated. From twenty-five to thirty yards of these silks are required for a very simple dress, as there are only nineteen or twenty inches wide, and cost one dollar a yard.

A beautiful fabric called satin luine of soie is an improvement on the cashmere de laine worn during the winter. It has a soft enough for summer wear, less raised damask figures of silk on wool, and comes in exquisite colors and quality. This is also meant for over dresses with gros grain or velvet draperies.—Harper's Bazar.

Charles V. and Antony Fugger.

In the sixteenth century, Charles V. made a considerable loan of Antony Fugger, at Augsburg, before entering upon his many successful campaigns against the Algerines. When the money-lender presented himself at the imperial levee, he was kept in an ante-room for a long time, and was finally admitted with a very cold reception. "Prince," said Fugger, "I have been waiting for your majesty's pleasure for more than an hour." "Count," replied the emperor, "I have other business to attend to than that of receiving your money." "Sire," said Fugger, "I am not come to ask for it, but to offer you more." "Then," said the emperor, "I will see you presently." Fugger withdrew, and in a short time returned with a bag containing 10,000 ducats, which he laid at the feet of the emperor. "Count," said Charles, "I will not receive your money, unless you will take a receipt for it." "Sire," said Fugger, "I am your debtor for 10,000 ducats more." Charles immediately granted him a receipt for the whole sum.

SHANNY AND WONT.

Shan't and Won't were inseparable brothers,
Angry and sullen and grim;
Try and Will are dear little sisters,
Who scarcely can love them enough

Shan't and Won't looked down on their sisters,
Their force were dismal to see;
Try and Will are brighter than roses
In June, and as lithe as a bee.

Shan't and Won't were backward and stupid,
Little, indeed, did they know;
Try and Will learn something new daily,
And seldom are heedless or slow.

Shan't and Won't loved nothing; no nothing
Pleased them or to have them on way.
Try and Will give up to their sisters,
And try to please others at play.

Shan't and Won't came to terrible trouble,
Their story is too sad to tell;
Try and Will somehow going to school,
Learning to read and to spell.

PINKIE'S TEA-PARTY.

"TURBELL be Jennie, she's one, and Maudie and Lulie, they're two, and Ruth, makes, it mentiffes me that I can't count three. And Ellie and Flo and Grace—Mamma, are you in real truly earnest?"

"Yes, dear, you can take your choice between birthday presents and a tea-party."

"Oh, I've chose the party the moment you mentioned 'bout it. But am I to do all my own things? Say you self?"

The family were gathered in the room for worship, and mamma only had time to nod assent before the books were given out and the reading began. Pinkie sat still as a mouse, thinking who to invite to her party, until papa, in whose lap she sat, found it his turn.

"Then and He also to him that hath," Jennie had finished the books, and papa began to go out and make a more thorough search, when the door bell rang. A pierce ing shriek was heard from Katy as she opened the door, and then Pinkie's voice rang out, loud and clear: "Come in! come right in the parlor! It's just exactly time now for a game. The party's most ready. Come right straight in!" And in they came, Pinkie at their head, serenely triumphant. Maggie released Katy's clothes. The parlor was full of them.

He was a trifle unvrous under the pressure of her arms upon his collar, but he spoke reassuringly.

"I will bear it la mind, my dear."

"You will think of me as mourning your absence and anxiously awaiting your return?" she murmured.

"You can trust me to attend to it," he replied, with as much firmness as if it had been a request for six barrels of mackerel.

"And you'll be very careful of yourself for my sake?" she suggested, in a broken voice.

"I will see it attended to, my dear; but it is almost time for the train," said he gravely, fought to remove her arms from his neck.

"John, John!" she convulsively yelled, "don't forget me, don't forget me!"

"Maria," he said, with a tinge of reproach in his tone, "I have made a memorandum to that effect."

And then she let him go—still tearfu., but confident "it would be attended to."

He Wouldn't Forget Her.

He was a wonderfully practical man, and she was wonderfully poetical. To her, life has been a dream edged with gold and filled in with the loveliest of roseate hues. But to him had appeared everything in the home-spun garb of every-day life. He is a country merchant, and buys his goods in New York. His partner always went to the city on business connected with the grocery, but the partner was recently ill, and our extremely practical friend was obliged to go. It was his first visit to the great city, and he was to be gone three days. It was a momentous event to his fond wife. He is the best she could be mind was troubled with forebodings. It is difficult to tell how she strolling musician—did not laved eye evident he realized the importance of the step he was about to take, still he never lost sight of the fact that a mighty responsibility was resting upon his shoulders, and that all private emotion must be unobserved to public interest. His carpet-bag was packed, and his hand on the door to pass out of the house, when she bade him good-bye. She put both arms about his neck.

"John," she sobbed, "you are going away."

This was so palpable that it would have been insipous to attempt a denial, so he merely observed:

"Look out for my collar, Maria."

"You will think of your wife while you are gone?" she whispered, huskily.

He was a trifle nervous under the pressure of her arms upon his collar, but he spoke reassuringly.

"I will bear it la mind, my dear."

"You will think of me as mourning your absence and anxiously awaiting your return?" she murmured.

"You can trust me to attend to it," he replied, with as much firmness as if it had been a request for six barrels of mackerel.

"And you'll be very careful of yourself for my sake?" she suggested, in a broken voice.

"I will see it attended to, my dear; but it is almost time for the train," said he gravely fought to remove her arms from his neck.

And then she let him go—still tearfu., but confident "it would be attended to."

—Danbury News.

"Show me where to find her, then, and I will go to her," said Sir Evan, with a strange unlove of lip and saying.

The mother was about to call the daughter, when one of the boys, hastily opening the door, pointed to the room where Ellen was busily talking off the butter from the churn. She was arrayed in a plain gray linen dress, clean and neat, and the curls, that had hung so prettily about her neck and face at the wedding, were fastened back with a piece of bright blue-colored ribbon, but the drooping, full, lily like figure and the untired gray eyes were the same, and the expression he thought so angelic when she gathered the broken primroses was still the same also. Indeed, as he gazed upon her, he thought her more beautiful than ever. She looked bewildered at the fair face of the young man, and he took her hand, saying: "I have accepted your invitation, Ellen. You see I have returned, though in good south your eyes would speak a warmer welcome if I had come with my tattered coat and my dolls."

Ellen stood speechless in astonishment; for she saw, indeed, he was no other than the strolling musician—the last laced eye had felt a tender regret in Ellen's case for which she had often child herself; and as it fleded across her mind what he was, and how she had stolen his packets with fresh and beef, she fell on her knees, crying: "Forgive me, sir; oh, forgive me. I knew not, indeed, you were any other than what you seemed."

"Forgive you, Ellen! Yes, my fair girl, you have more need of forgiveness than you think, for you have stolen my peace of mind away. Will you restore it by being my partner now—my partner now—for all my life long?" He raised her from the floor as he spoke and drew her tenderly to his heart; and she had not face upon his bosom and wept tears of the purest joy and gladness as, smiled his caresses, she promised to be his through life. He led her back to get a blessing from her parents, he took from his bosom a bouquet of the latest primroses of the year and fixed them in her breast, whispering: "These flowers must always be sacred to us; for it was when you were gathering those of mine, so rudely broken and scattered by an ungentle hand, that my soul went out to you in the fullness of its first affection."

So Ellen became the wife of Sir Evan, and through life proved herself a true wife, a loving mother, and a benefactress to the poor and lowly. Sir Evan's mother never had cause to regret having given her sanction to the marriage; for she became very proud of her lovely daughter-in-law, whose charming manners and truly astonishing her more and more. They are old now and the elder lady has passed away; and Sir Evan's children are grown up to manly sons and beautiful daughters, being loved and wooed and won in their turn; but none of them are happier with their lovers than Ellen is with Sir Evan; and in the spring he never sets out a bouquet of primroses in places in her bed as she had done long family all know the story; and they have heard how chagrined the haughty Margaret was when she learned who she had refused to decline as the wedding fee. The river side, and whose flowers she had so rudely and cast to the winds, and the most valued jewel in the castle is the fair Ellen in her white gown and blue ribbons, and sunny, rippling, golden brown hair, with a simple lace, half gleaf, half regretful, gathering into her bosom the broken primroses, and a heart-eyed, handsome Highland—gazing at her with unalonate admiration.

Spring Silks.

THE soft, lustrous Louisine silks are imported in low priced qualities for evening dresses for the spring. These come in delicate designs in small checks of white or ecru, with black or dark color, and are sold for one dollar a yard. Good taffeta silks in these patterns are bought for the same price by present, and those should be chosen when the taffe dress and made of one material. Louisine silk is pronounced for over-dresses above plain gros grain.

Damasse Louisines are new this season. They are shown in green, black, blue, brown and myrtle green shades in satin, which she had often child herself; and as it faded across her mind what he was, and how she had stolen his packets with fresh and beef, she fell on her knees, crying: "Forgive me, sir; oh, forgive me. I knew not, indeed, you were any other than what you seemed."

"Forgive you, Ellen! Yes, my fair girl, you have more need of forgiveness than you think, for you have stolen my peace of mind away. HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

THICK PUDDING.—One cup each of chopped suet, stoned raisins, molasses and milk, and one egg, three cups of sifted flour, a little salt and a pinch of soda; loaf three hours, serve with sweet sauce.

BUTTERNUT CAKE.—Four eggs, beaten separately, two cups sugar, one of butter, one cup buttermilk, one-half cup sweet milk, two and one-half cups flour (heaped), one teaspoonful soda, two of cream tartar. Rub the black coles off from the meats before putting them in the cake. Bake in four loaves.—N. Y. Times.

APPLE BUTTER.—Cut the apples in quarters. Do not pare or core them, dip each quarter into clear water and put them in a jar, and place them in the oven to cook until quite tender. Strain all the juice or semal, and boil with a pound of sugar to a pint of juice. The most delicious jelly will be the result, with the full, pure flavor of the apple.—Orange Judd Farmer.

TO COOK SPINACH.—Wash and clean the spinach thoroughly from grit; then boil it in salt water; press the water entirely out of it and chop it as fine as possible. A quarter of an hour before serving put it into a saucepan, with a piece of butter mixed with a tablespoonful of flour and half a tumblerful of boiling water, some salt, pepper and a little nutmeg, and let thicken. Stir frequently. Serve with hard boiled eggs on the top.

DANDY PUDDING.—One quart milk, yolks four eggs, two tablespoons flour mixed with a little cold milk, when the milk begins to boil, add the egg, well beaten, and the flour; sweeten to taste; flavor with vanilla or lemon; boil two minutes; put in dish, and when cold drop in islands on top, the well beaten whites of the eggs; put in oven and brown.

HONEY BEETER.—White or brown sugar twenty pounds, soft water six pounds, pure beef's honey three pounds, cream of tartar eighty grains, essence of peppermint four drops. Mix the stove in a brass kettle, boil over a charcoal fire five minutes, take it off, add the whites of two eggs well beaten; when almost cold add two pounds more beef's honey. A pint of the decoction of slippery elm, of the consistency of cream, will improve the honey, if it is added while cooling.—Rural New Yorker.

FRESH HARDEST FISH BALLS.—To two pounds of boiled halibut add double the quantity of hot mashed potatoes, the fish must be picked in small pieces, and but no skin nor bone. Pepper it, a spoonful sugar, one of butter, and stir well together with one hand, and beat with the other light and quick, using a fork; add one egg, a teaspoonful of milk, and mash the steps your mother used to, so; for it was a pair of the mashed, the flame, the fluted."

Pinkie was very attentive all the rest of the time. She brought her mother knees she whispered eagerly to her father.

"Who is He? The one that said who to invite to her party, and when Jennie answered, "The Lord Jesus, darling," she said, musingly, "I s'pose it must know Him. Wonder how would a thought of it, would they've got Him, without waiting for an answer, off she ran.

The girls were all very loving in school that day, and Pinkie was very strictest confidence—"Promise you'd never tell so long's you live, SAYEM"—held only half the secret from the other half. Pinkie May was going to have a tea-party to-morrow, and her mother said she could have just about as many as there are girls. Jennie's nature is small girls is strikingly like that of grains. Ruth hopes to have a tea-party in the same thing in big people. Pink

Ford and His Justice.

An interesting criminal case was tried last Tuesday at Little Traverse, before the Hon. Manning F. Drake, better known as the property of C. R. Ford. The trial revealed some very rich facts and ideas as to the manner in which the official business of Emmet county, under Ford's administration is conducted. The case was this

One of our citizens was arrested on complaint of Ford, on the charge of assault and battery alleged to have been committed on a certain female, and as the respondant happens to be one of the witnesses against Ford in the cases of the United States, against him for violation of the revenue laws, no pains was spared by him in trying to get a conviction. The trial was by jury, and Ford presented with usual vigor, his justice allowed him to introduce any evidence he saw fit, overruling all objections made by the opposing attorney, and on the offense any evidence offered on the part of the respondent was instantly excluded by the justice whenever Ford said it was incompetent After the testimony was closed, Ford arose before his tasty, the Justice, and stated that matters had taken a very sudden turn, that there was something about the case he did not exactly understand, and he would like to adjourn a couple of hours for reflection The respondent's attorney, J. G. Hill, Esq., made his suggestion that it made but little if any difference whether Ford understood matters or not, he thought the jury did, and did not think they wished for any time for reflection The Justice was about to grant the motion, when one of the jurors made the suggestion that the jury would prefer to get through with their duties without delay, and the Justice did, although very much against his wishes, requested the said Ford to proceed with his argument. After the arguments the jury were left in the court-room in charge of the Constable to consider their verdict. Ford and the Justice retired to the outside near the window to listen to the deliberation of the jury, and find out if possible what was the matter. They ascertained by means of their 'eavesdropping,' that five were for acquittal, and one for conviction, and something must be done; so Ford immediately sends the Justice to the jury with a paper containing some communication. Ford remained at the window to ascertain the effect of his billet, and to his horror it brought the dissenting juror immediately over on the side of acquittal, and the officer in charge came out and announced that the jury had agreed. Ford and the Justice then held a hasty consultation, and went in with their visages shrouded in gloom and disappointment. The jury being asked by the Justice if they had agreed on their verdict, the foreman replied they had, and thereupon Ford instantly bobbed up and announced to the Justice that he objected to the verdict being received, and moved to dismiss the case stating that he intended to hunt up better evidence, and try the respondent over again. This move was greatly ridiculed by the respondent's counsel, but that short consultation outside between Ford and his Justice settled the matter in the mind of the court, and he would not receive the verdict, but discharged the jury and the respondent. And Emmet county is thus pestered with Ford and his Drake—they know just enough law to get people into difficulty and involve the county in needless expenses, and the only query is how long do the people of Emmet county intend to tolerate this nuisance.—Petoskey Democrat.

McFarland, the murderer of Alfred D. Huntenburg, was taken up in the streets of St. Louis a few days ago in a state of extreme intoxication. He has become a common drunkard. In his moments of delirium he often raves of the assassination, all the circumstances of which seem to be indelibly photographed in his memory. The Nemesis which has pursued this miserable wretch has wrought out from him perhaps a more frightful punishment than any the law could have inflicted

THE LONGEST WAY ROUND

It was the longest way round, we knew,
But more I needed read an short before;
For Jim and I were only half through
Promising all things happy and true,
When there was the old familiar door

And father was looking out for me—
Dear old father, no wise and good!
And he kindly pretended not to see
How wonderfully shy and glad were we,
Who paused, and stilled before his mood.

"Seems to me you are late to-night,
If'n', 'fore your wa on the home-ward route,
Y-ou did, eh?" oh, to the stern voice bright,
Betraying my blushes in father's sight,
Betraying our secret, without a doubt!

Did he remember his own young day?
Maybe so, for he asked no more,
And Jim and I passed the usual way—
A simple "good-night," and no more to say,
And then between us the cottage door.

But one glad sight as we neared the door,
Where father stood waiting and watching for me.
He gravely said, "You are very late;
Just step inside here, Jim, and wait
Till I can have a word with Mary."

Well, we sat mum what the old clock said
While I kissed Jim, on the porch, "good-night,"
But every fear from my heart had fled
As on Jim's sitting heart I bowed my head,
Knowing that father had thought right.

Harper's Weekly.

A TALE OF A BLUNDERBUSS.

The writer of this was born in a house in the far west of Ireland. My father was what was then called a surveyor—now he is called, I believe, into civil engineer. His employment was to me mysterious and delightful. While I and my brothers were cooped up at home, learning our lessons, getting into scrapes and being whipped, he rode gaily off to "the office" as we knew it, and I used to long to be a man! No learning of lessons, no whippings or tears, no getting into scrapes—nothing to do but to please one's self, and yet, strangely enough, father often seemed to me as pale, and careworn, and weary as if he had not just finished "get Ung off" fifty verses, and was afraid the strap would be his reward.

As I grew bigger, the desire to know more of the great town, lying so near and yet so far, became so strong that I was ever planning it into my father's care. Why could I not go to town as he did?

"Ah!" I said, "I'll never go near or touch the nasty thing again. I'll——"

"Ah, then, Jack," replied my father, "you talk like a girl! But, hallo! here we are in the middle of the bog, and I attending to get the sugar-road. That's what comes of gossiping!"

Looking round, I recognized a part of the road over which we had passed in the morning. It was a sort of raised causeway, like a railway embankment, and ran right across the center of a large tract of bog. It was the nearest way from our house to town, but was seldom made use of except in the daytime. Out of repair, unsheltered from wind or rain, and flanked on either side by a deep ditch, full of ugly, black, deadly-looking water, it was anything but a pleasant road to travel after dark. Its very position, an evil reputie hung over it. Several lives had been lost in the ugly ditch on either side, and the place had become notorious as a place frequented by spectres and chimæræ. This, of itself, was enough to deter most people, and my father halted the pony and looked round.

"Ah!" he said, after a moment's pause, "it's all right. See, the moon'll be out in a minute or two. Meanwhile, well jog on quietly."

"Dolly knew the road of old, and started forward carefully, but scarcely had she gone a dozen yards when, as I sprang from the bowels on the earth, or rising out of the black ditch, as Venus from the sea, a tall form—looking taller than it really was, in the weird light—stood forth in the way.

Another step, and we saw that the figure was that of a man, dressed in a long three-coat and carrying an enormous stick, or "wattle," so long that when used for resting it was grasped one-third of its length below the top.

"God save ye, sir!" said the man, stepping aside a little as we drew near.

"God save ye kindly," replied my father, as he swayed the pony a little to one side, so as to allow the man a free pass.

But the man turned, and faced toward the way we were going.

"A very fine night, sir," said the man, as he edged nearer and nearer to the head of the pony, "but there's a very discreet spoonside gentleman's bin late about these roads of late. There was Mr. Purcell last week, an' Mr. Dease the week afore. Aye, an' last night there was—"

"Nonsense, Mick," laughed my father, as he quickened the pony's pace. "They'll enemies but I've none. There isn't a man in all Sligo county would hurt a hair of my head."

And the next minute we were out on road, and Mick was turning slowly up again toward the house.

Whether or not I enjoyed the town after reaching there, I cannot say. My chief feeling was, I believe, one of bewilderment. The houses were so high, the streets so narrow and crowded, that I felt choked, as it were. I was delighted, and full of wonder, of course; but when, just at dusk, the pony was brought to the office door, I was almost as ready to return home as I had been to leave it a few hours before.

The day had been a long one at the office, and looking in my father's face I could see that he was not in a humor to talk, so I scrambled up behind him in silence and we were about to start, when a voice of entreaty a little behind stayed us.

"Hold hard, sir—hold hard, sir," cried the cry. "Here's the instrumint, sir."

Looking back, I saw a little man hurrying along the center of the road toward us, and holding in his hand and waving up and down a something that shone bright in the fast departing light.

"Oh, sir, the blunderbuss," said my father. "I had forgotten it. Thank you, Connolly, you needn't have followed me with it. I could have had it on Monday."

"I promises I far today, sir," replied the old man, panting, as he reached the pony's side, and held up the weapon. "an' I always like to keep me word. Here it is, sir."

"Thank you, Connolly. Good-by," returned my father. "good by, boys. All! Get along, Dolly."

Next moment we were clattering away down the street that looked toward home at a great rate.

When we were well clear of the town we slackened somewhat, for the road had grown dark. Then my father turned to me a little.

"Well, Dick," he said, "how have you enjoyed yourself, and how did you like the town?"

"Oh, papa, it was lovely," I replied, as I squeezed his arm; "and you're so good for letting me come with you."

"Lovely, was it?" he murmured, with a laugh which was half a sigh. "I'm afraid one day in it are as little beauty in it as I do, and be as tired of it as I am."

Then he relapsed into silence; but the tone of his voice had been so kind to me that presently I made bold to speak to him again.

"Papa," said I, laying my hand upon the butt of the blunderbuss, which hung, muzzle downwards, from his shoulder, "is this the old blunderbuss that used to hang in the hall at home, or is it a new one?"

"Is this the old one, Dick, my boy," replied my father. "Clean or dirty, I wouldn't part with it for the best score of Queen Bosses in the English army."

"Papa," I said, with something of a shiver, and yet feeling attached to the shining, cruel thing, "has it ever killed people?"

"Ah, yes, it has done it's duty many a time," replied my father. "My great-grandfather took it from the head of a chief veteran on the field of Aughrim. It was then black and bloody, and it has done many a day's work since."

I shuddered, and shrank back from the evil thing so far as I could without losing my balance. My father felt the action.

"Don't be afraid of the poor thing," he muttered, half-laughingly; "it won't hurt you. And I do hope it may never more have any work to do."

"Ah!" I said, "I'll never go near or touch the nasty thing again. I'll——"

"Look here!" cried my father, as he bent low over the neck of the pony, as the moon thine bringing round the mouth of the blunderbuss so that it gazed right in the face of the man—" this is what makes me not afraid of all the prowling villains in the country."

As he spoke he regained his former position, and the moon, shooting from behind the last cloud that had hid it, flashed full on the polished barrel of the blunderbuss. The man staggered back an instant, then made a step as if he were about to leap the black ditch, and disappear in among the clumps of turf that dotted the waste.

"Hold!" cried my father, still in the same fierce, low, quick tone. "Don't attempt to leave me."

The man, as if moved by some power beyond his will, turned obediently, and stepped forward.

"Now, listen," continued my father. "If you attempt to move one foot out of the direct path, if you go a single step faster or slower than we do, if you whistle, sing or make a sign of any kind that may be heard or seen by your murderous companions lurking behind those stacks of turf, I'll blow your brains out."

The man gave one quick glance over his right shoulder, saw the side mount and bright barrel of the blunderbuss bearing right down upon him, my father's hand grasping the lock and my father's fierce eyes and white, stern face looking for the slightest sign of disobedience. He shivered, dropped his eyes to the ground and walked on steadily.

After this no sound, save the pat of the pony's feet, the noise of the bogpine, or the deep breathing of the man, broke the stillness until the bog was passed and the regular road was gained.

At this my father drew a breath of relief, and leaned back in the saddle. The man glanced quickly round, then sprang toward the fence by the roadside, bounded over it and disappeared.

Then my father grasped the reins tightly, leaned forward a little, and, for the first time for a year, Dolly felt the spurs. Ten minutes more, and the Light was flying from the flints beneath her hoofs, in our lane, and I could hear the joyful cry of Mick O'Hara as he flung back the gate, and we dashed on to the farm.

"The Lord be praised this night!" cried Mick—" the Lord above be praised! Here is master, safe and sound!"

My father did not speak, but dismounted slowly, helped me to my feet, then flung the reins to Mike, walked into the house, and laid the blunderbuss on the table in the parlor as softly as if it had been a child.

"This old piece has never done a better piece of work than to-night," he said solemnly; "for it has saved a life instead of slaying. But what do you think, Dick?" and he turned to me laughing—" there hasn't been an ounce of powder in that old barrel for twenty years. If that fellow had only known, he might have laughed at us."

That old blunderbuss hangs above my fireplace now—one of the household gods no money could buy.

A Giant Fire-Cracker.

TEN years ago the War Department directed Gen. John Newton, of the United States Engineer Corps, to make estimates for the removal of the obstructions in the East River at Hallett's Point, familiarly known as "Hell Gate." Many attempts to remove the obstructions had been previously made, but had altogether failed in the one great end—that of securing the channel safe and deep enough to admit the largest ocean steamships. But on the receipt of the General's report the sum of $34,981 was raised, partly by subscription among our local merchants and partly by a grant from Congress. The survey for the work was made in 1869.

The work itself involved the removal of the Middle Reef, Gridiron, Hen and Chickens, and Negro's Head; virtually the complete demolition of Hallett's Point. In September, 1869, the first mine, chimney was erected and the work of throwing into the heart of the submerged rocks progressed slowly but surely. The narrow delay of Congress in appropriating the necessary funds, and the niggardly, paltry allowances made hampered the advancement of the scheme. At last, however, it is announced so near completion, by the bulletin, that the chamber prepared for the great charge which is to rend the stony mass to splinters and make Hell Gate a terror of the past, is as large as it is required to be. By this explosion the eastern entrance to the port of New York will be opened to vessels of twenty-six feet draught. The cost of the affair in money has been, so far, $750,000.

The work has been under the direction of Gen. Newton, and deserves special record in the annals of American engineering. At the extremity of Hallett's Point, which is laid bare at low water, a central shaft was sunk, and the ledges of rocks into which it descended was surrounded by a coffer-dam to guard the workings from high tides. From the main shaft ten large headings radiated, like the spokes of a wheel, running out into the river-bed and under the reefs which it was necessary to remove. From these twenty-eight smaller drifts were driven. The larger shafts, the chief of which was 200 feet long, were named after various United States officers, as the Grant, McClellan, Meade, etc., galleries, and were connected at regular distances by lateral galleries, circular in form and concentric with the center of the shaft. Twenty-two and one-half acres were thus undermined in this way, and one and a half miles of tunneling made. The great danger attendant on the work was, of course, that likely to result from the caving of the roof rock. To fully guard against this soundings were made all over the work at regular intervals of one foot. In ordinary cases the lead was sunk, but where shale was met with, the patent sounding instrument was driven through the bed rock by boring. But few short of 30,000 of these measurements were required to establish the necessary knowledge of the ground. The best comment on the correctness of the measurements arrived at be in the fact that no serious case of caving in the galleries has occurred since the work was commenced.

As enormous quantity of blasting material was used; at first nitro-glycerine, but later an agent composed of thirty parts of nitro-glycerine to seventy of gunpowder. This compound, called vulcan powder, answered the requirements better than any other, possessing the short, quick blast required in a marcel. Explosives equivalent on the whole to 150,000 pounds of nitro-glycerine, have been consumed in bringing the work to its present state.

Today the mine is to receive the final charge; in the pit or chamber, which is thirty-five feet deep and 200 feet in diameter, 10,000 small holes, two and a half inches in diameter, and from seven to twelve feet deep, are being drilled in the roof and sides of the passages for further blasts, and are to be charged with the explosive inclosed in iron tubes. In the matter of that explosive the engineers are as reasonable as doubt. From among the useless tons of blasting material at their command they desire to select that which can be most certainly relied on for effective work. The choice has so far narrowed down to two, respectively known as Rendrock and Kieselguhr. The latter is a German compound, an especial favorite in the extensive workings of the Prussian mines. The charges are to be simultaneously ignited by percussion, with caps similar in principle to those of a gun.

Forty thousand pounds of nitro-glycerine, or four tons, will be the charge. The discharge of the various blasts is to be effected by electricity, and, in order to avoid the possibility of an irregular series of explosions, Gen. Newton proposes to connect the mines by means of an electric wire inclosed in a tubing and carried about the entire workings, to communicate fire directly with each blast. A hundred and twenty men are at present employed drilling the holes for the minor blasts, and twenty-one of them are driven each day.

The effect of the discharge of this enormous magazine can easily be imagined, and if, as the Superintendent of the work hopes, its final preparations may be reached by then, New York will hail her Centennial Fourth of July with a right loyal and New England welcome. The men are working hard to get things into train for the occasion, and talk of their great work as a worthy rival of Phillo-hipolah's great gift to the Centennial Republic.—*N. Y. A Ghost Story.

THE Sherburne News is responsible for the following ghost story:

On the shore of Lake Ontario there once was an old-fashioned stone mansion, more like a castle than anything else, that was said to be haunted. Indeed, its very appearance would suggest such an idea to a believer in haunted houses. It stood on a lonely point of barren, land that ran out into the lake about three miles from the village of St. C——. You might look the whole shore over and over and not find half as dreary and lonesome a spot. Not even a tree or shrub, nothing but a rocky foot-path leading to the main road. It had been neglected for many years, as no one would live in it on account of the many strange stories of it. The roof was covered with moss, the walls looked old and rusty. An old story current that as their had been murdered by some of the smuggling gangs on the coast, who, after enjoying it for a time, was so annoyed by strange noises in the haunted mansion that he left in search of conscience, and soon after died in England.

A few years ago the property fell into the hands of a gentleman who, nothing daunted, determined to make this mansion his place of residence.

It was a wild night in November; a fierce storm was raging on the lake, and the wind howled and shrieked like a score of grizzled witches on a moonlight rail. It was twelve o'clock, midnight! A lonesome sound man through the spare, pale face of the

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

The City's Victory.—Field Frustrated.—A Sickening Calamity.

Plain Facts Enemy. The Quicksands of Wall Street.—Gone on Vacation.

Amusements Secular and Sacred.—An Unjust Sentence.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

NEW YORK, Mar. 18, 1876.

To our patrons a word or two:—

The final decision of the Tweed suit cannot be had until the expiration of 21 days after the decision against the Tammany Ring compelled the grand system of reform and investigation, which after five years of toil, and the prominent opposition, seems now to be reaching its climax. It is a fact to have the feeling, "Is the deal on, and drop out at last from an ugly tax report, exposed by an Evening Post or Times editorial, or be kept on, being the only exception, for a thousand dollars less than the other assistant whom the city, thanks to Jacob Sharp, Wilson & Co., Speaker Kelly & Co., Tweed & Co., Sweeny & Co., Connolly & Co., Genet & Co., Garvey & Co., Ingersoll & Co., Tilden & Co., and the whole network of the Ring, with whom the writer claims to be acquainted by his 4 years' history with each, largely owes a vast debt of gratitude for its present exemption from taxation. Now in New York, some call Dr. Comyn, and say we have with the Yankee and Irish and Dutch to be entered every day with the tide of a business community as Washington entered the affairs of the Republic, a call for the best talent for some trouble or need.

Just at this time a great excitement is caused in the Wall street, the moment's anxiety was upon made up of the panic of mid last week, and its votes distorted very much in atmosphere. Young Tweed himself, the boy now 15 apparent, and figure trading in that most popular commodity. Added to great natural weakness and quickness of perception, he possessed for some time to these securities and their property ownership, the thing and "shaving" them to suit his convenience, until he had taken a great sum of money. The prosecuting authorities in particular, the Evening Post, "just as financial" on Tuesday, "just as financial" on Wednesday, "just as financial" on Thursday, and now, and now the amount of stock in question is acquired the confession of officers. Tweed, which stood so firm for years, retained. In 1865 he came to New York, and immediately plunged into those affairs, such as for each himself years before, and, in his banking the Ring business, undeniably succeeded, so much so, in fact, that it has come to be a question whether all the stock in the banks is partly owned by him and his good-natured co-operators, guardians.

In Brooklyn, beside the Bowker affair, which I think is becoming chronic, there has been the strange and terrible calamity—Oblivion attested, reported by telegraph—at the burning of an asylum for the aged in which although the building was a substantially built brick structure, seemingly well provided with means of egress, most of the unfortunate inmates suffered a horrible death. The details of the occurrences are too death reading for repetition.

In the Bowker matter, above referred to, the work has developed nothing new, and still its routine business possesses interest for many persons who have become editorial to the troubles. Its recent doings may be easily epitomized. Plymouth politely intimates that Mr. Bowen is a prevaricator and a hoax; Bowen kindly responds that it is no such thing, and Plymouth's another. Which of these statements, if either, is accurate, is one of the things which, up to date, no fellow can find out.

THE NEWS.

CONCERNING the acceptance by the President of Secretary Belknap's resignation, it is said the President has emphatically stated that he was not aware, at the time, of the enormity of the charges against the latter. From the hurried and irrelevant manner of the Secretary's conversation to him, the President drew the conclusion that Mrs. Belknap, and not per husband, was the guilty party; and that the General assumed all responsibility and censure in order to shield his wife. Although he did not believe that the latter had in any way actually guilty, he confessed that he was not free from blame. Had the President known of the whole truth in the matter, it is said he would not have accepted the resignation as he did, but would have suspended the Secretary until the investigation was over. At a meeting of the Cabinet, on the 5d, the President stated that he had determined to shrink from no responsibility devolving upon him, and he therefore desired the Attorney-General to proceed with criminal charges against Gen. Belknap and Messrs. Marsh and Tomlinson and all others deemed to be connected with the recent bribery case. The Cabinet approved of this determination, and the entire matter was referred to the Attorney-General.

Senator Jones, of Nevada, who was married to his young wife about a year since, has been presented by her with a little baby girl, and it is so ludicrous a sight to see the great, rich fellow come down on his knees before that mite bunch of pink and muslin, and make up faces at it, as he declares that, for real happiness, "big beauties ain't nothin' to babies."

UNITED STATES Senators Edmunds and Morrill of Vermont, Morrill of Maine, Paddock of Nebraska, and Christiancy of Michigan, were the Republican Senators who voted against the admission of Pinchback.

A WASHINGTON Associated Press dispatch of the 15th says, it would be several days before the Judiciary Committee would report articles of impeachment against ex-Secretary Belknap. No testimony of importance had been taken since that of Marsh. Six or seven persons living in the vicinity of Marsh & Evans' late trading post had been summoned to testify. A member of the Judiciary Committee had said that proof could be procured to support the charges against Belknap, independent of Marsh's testimony. The District Attorney had stated that the evidence presented so far to the Grand Jury was not sufficient to warrant an indictment, and it was probable that, unless Marsh could be brought back to testify, it would be impossible to indict Belknap through the medium of a criminal prosecution.

HON. ALPHONSO TAFT, the new Secretary of War, was sworn in at Washington on the 11th.

A FOURTH-STORY brick Elizabethtown, Md., on the evening of the 10th, and positioned some seventeen houses, killed five persons and severely wounded several others, some probably fatally. At least, three dwellings and the railroad depot were blown down and three persons killed. At Catoctin and other points in the State much damage was done to property.

GEN. SHERMAN is said to have recently told a St. Louis reporter that he was in decline a nomination for the Presidency, "even if it were unanimous and enthusiastic."

ACCORDING to an Alexandria (Egypt) dispatch of the 12th, on the preceding Wednesday, the Abyssinians lost attacked the Egyptian army. The fighting continued until the next day when the Abyssinians were driven off leaving King Kassa, the Grand Vizier, six chiefs and 5,000 warriors dead in the trenches. The Egyptian loss was very heavy but the victory was complete.

THE boiler of a locomotive exploded at the Union Depot in Indianapolis, on the morning of the 13th, and was completely wrecked. At the same time another engine standing in the neighborhood was destroyed. The engineer of the latter was instantly killed and the fireman severely injured. The engineer and fireman of the former were on their engine at the time, but were not injured. The seat and wall of the depot and ten or fifteen feet of the roof were blown off.

GREAT excitement was recently caused in Bath County, Ky., by the fall from the sky of a large quantity of what had the appearance of being lead. Specimens were submitted to a Louisville scientist, who concluded that they were the dried crown of Burnside's regular, doubtless that of the frog. He thinks they had been transported from ponds and swampy grounds by wind currents, and had fallen on the spot where they were found.

THE French Senate was organized on the 14th, by the election of Duke D'Audiffret Pasquier as President, and two Vice-Presidents from the Left and two from the Right. The Chamber of Deputies elected Grevy as President, and three Vice-Presidents from the Left.

ON the 12th and 13th, furious gales prevailed along the French and English coasts, and great damage was done afloat and ashore. On the 13th, an unknown brigantine was seen to founder at mid-day, all Portland, and all on board perished.

REV. DR. STORRS, of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, makes a statement to his congregation on the evening of April 12th, giving his reasons for resigning the Presidency of the American Congregational Union. He condemned the rules laid down by the late Advisory Council for the admission of members and the guidance of Congregational Churches, and spoke deprecatingly of many of the acts of such council. He thought the request of Andover Church to Plymouth Church perfectly proper, and that the council had no more right to deal with the matter than it had to conduct the trial of Gen. Hitbeck. At a business meeting of Dr. Storrs' church, on the evening of the 13th, resolutions were adopted by a large majority, repudiating the action of the Advisory Council, re-nominating Hitchcock with churches which adhere to the findings, and demanding a thorough investigation of the Beecher scandal.

The bill also provides for the repeal of so much of the Resumption act of Jan. 14, 1875, as designates the 1st of January, 1879, as the date of resumption.

THE New York Greenback Mass-Convention met at Syracuse on the 15th. Richard Schell was elected permanent President. The resolutions declare opposition to any repudiation of the Nation's obligations, but assert that the act of Congress of March, 1869, pledging to pay the 5-20's in gold, is a gross violation of the contract whereby said bonds were bought, and that said law was passed by fraud; that the effort now making by the Secretary of the Treasury to pay fractional currency in silver should be immediately prohibited, as silver is worth less than its

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

A Week of Another Centennial Lenten Season—Old and Modern Relics.

The Coin Wars—A Controversy Between Centennial Commissioners and Mineral Producers.

NEW YORK, May 13, 1876.

From the Centennial.

Some time the 4th of March 1776 of this year for a good part of the day it was impossible to say whether the population of the New York Island, of the environs of Boston or the Old Dutch town on the Delaware had suffered the greatest loss of life. Perhaps their good luck was not much better in relation to numbers.

It would perhaps be safe to assert that the shock to the sensibilities of the American population of the New York Island, of the environs of Boston or the Old Dutch town on the Delaware, from the news of the murder of St. Patrick,

THE MAN.

If there's a man a wife the better
For her thrifty and his gainer?
For his savings and his palaces,
Or his opened heart to actions
In a man's what the better?

And if a man's on whit the better
For his coffers and his chalices,
For his purple and fine linen,
For his vineyards and his wines,
Why do thousands bend the knee
And cringe to mean servility,
If a man's no whit the better?

In a man a whit the worse
For a shabby dress of rags?
Though he owns no lordly mansion,
If his heart is kind and goodly,
In a man a bit the worse?

And if a man's no bit the worse
For a poor and lowly stand,
For an empty purse basket,
And a meaning, working hand,
Why do thousands genuflect
With a deep and servile grace,
If a man's no whit the worse?

NUMBER FOUR, PROVIDENCE ROW.

CHAPTER I.

PROVIDENCE Row consists of a collection of little cottages, with long, narrow gardens in front.

Their outward appearance is inviting, but to find out what pretty little homes they are, we must take a peep into No. 6—for No. 6, Providence Row, is always in readiness to receive a visitor.

The Dutch clock strikes two; and Mary Cranfield begins to fold her work as she says:

"I suppose I had better go now, mother. I promised Mrs. Parkins I would run in for a little while as soon as you could spare me."

"Very well, my dear, be off as soon as you like, and if you can help her to get her house a little straight, do so."

Mrs. Cranfield might well make this last remark, and Mary thought of her mother's words as she entered Mrs. Parkins' home, another four, a few minutes afterwards, and cast a glance around at the picture of misery that it presented.

As she looked at the unswept stove, and the unwashed breakfast and dinner things, it might come into her mind how different the room would look if those little matters were attended to. The room altogether wanted freshening; there was an unchildlooome closeness, that made Mary step to open the window, and try to have a purifying current of fresh air through it once.

She had ample leisure for noting all those things, for Mrs. Parkins was a few doors down the Row, gossiping with a neighbor, whose tastes were, unfortunately, very much like her own.

On seeing Mary turn in at the garden gate, Mrs. Parkins had given her a friendly nod, a shout and an:

"You can let yourself in! I'm coming in a minute!"

But the minute extended to twenty before the small parcel end to her interesting conversation.

The sight of Mary kneeling, looking so neat, brought up a fresh subject to talk about, and Mrs. Parkins and her neighbor fairly wondered at the supposed extravagance of Mrs. Dowling in wearing, and allowing her daughter to wear, print dresses, which, as Mrs. Parkins and every one else knew, showed the dirt at once, and required to be washed so frequently.

"For them some people are like that," said Mrs. Parkins, "and if I went to those extravagances, my young man might have cause to complain of me, but as I am so saving as I can be, I do think it's a little hard when he's everlasting fault finding."

"That's just so I tell" said the neighbor settled herself against the rails in order to be a little more comfortable while she poured a few of her troubles into Mrs. Parkins' ears.

"I'm sure we poor wives are perfect slaves."

"Yes, nothing but work."

"When am I ever tidy and done? when does my one ever see me sitting down to mesmerize?"

"Never!"

"No! It's as much as I can do to get straight in the time Johns comes home, and then he's always grumbling because I don't mend the children's clothes."

"Mend!" continued Mrs. Parkins, "there's not much time for that. But I must be off now."

"Yes, and I suppose I must go to see light the fire again; I daresay it is out by this time. You wouldn't believe the wood we burn!" added Mrs. Jones, in inured tones; "but my grumbler expects a good fire when he comes home, cost what it will!"

With a laugh the two neighbors separated. Mrs. Parkins, with her two unwashed children, hastened down the dusty Row, raising quite a cloud behind her by the fluttering of the untidy rags at them of her dress.

"I've got back at last," she said, as she dropped into her cottage. "Really, when Mrs. Jones gets hold of one, there's no knowing when to get away. But, Mary, what are you about?"

"Oh, Mrs. Parkins, I hope you won't mind," said Mary looked up from the stove at which she had been in lustrious kneeling, "but I thought I might help to clear up the place a bit."

"Yes, but you needn't take all that trouble, and you've taken up all the cinders."

"I would have sifted them for you, but I couldn't find a sieve."

"Oh, we've no sifter."

"No, we always burn our cinders, Mother says it is such a saving of coals, it makes them last so long again."

Mrs. Parkins made no answer to this; but in a moment she said:

"Well, it does seem a shame to let you do that for me, with your clean dress on."

"I brought my large, coarse apron with me, for I knew you wanted to get a bit straight for when Mr. Parkins comes home."

"Ah, that I do; for of late he has been more than usually grumbling, and he has threatened to be off to the public house, as I thought of doing up a little more, to see if that would make him better pleased; but the time goes on, and there's such a deal to do."

"Oh, we shall have the better!" interrupted Mary, briskly; "we can make the place look so nice before he's home, he'll be so surprised."

"Well you are making me feel quite hustling," answered Mrs. Parkins, pleasantly, as she rose from her chair.

Both set to work with a will, and in less than an hour quite a change had taken place in this home. Not only was the cottage itself in order to receive its master, but the wife and little ones presented such a trim appearance that Mr. Parkins himself would scarcely have recognized them.

No cottage home could look more comfortable. The teathings were set, and the curtains were drawn, and as Mrs. Parkins sat singing the fire whose cheerful blaze lighted up every corner of the little room, she began to look back over the years of her past life. She had time to do so, for the little ones were unusually good, and Mary, after all her kindness, had taken her departure. But the good she had done remained behind her. Its healthy influence was at work in the cottage home that November evening.

Gentian ought must have drawn near and brought a holy power with them!

Jane Parkins was dangling on her knee this moment briefly; and as the new light dawned upon her she resolved to guard against them.

There would be no more gossiping with neighbors! This, she saw was the foundation of her untidy home, and also the cause of the unsavoriness that had taken place between herself and husband. This had both given up, would have speedily of time to keep her house in order and for attending to her duties as a wife and mother.

"But what is Tom?" she asks herself after a long and thoughtful pause; "he certainly ought to be home by this time."

With a look of anxiety on her face she glanced at the large Dutch clock, and saw that it was half an hour over his time already.

She went to the door and tried to look down the Row, but the fog that had been gathering when she left Mary out had become so dense that she could only see a few yards before her.

Yes, the fog had increased, and walking was most uncomfortable. Along the crowded thoroughfares people were hastening home, cheered by the memory of the bright fires which would welcome them at the end of their journey, and which made home home to them.

CHAPTER II.

It was not with any of these pleasurable feelings that Tom Parkins turned his face homeward; indeed, the nearer he approached his own neighborhood, the heavier grew the frown upon his brow.

"I've borne it as long as I can—there's the good of toiling and saving! I may just as well spend a bit of money on myself," were his thoughts.

Just at this moment he came to a tavern, the bright light from which shone full on the gloomy face. There were were going in at the door, but one of them catching sight of Tom, stepped back, and grasped him warmly by the hand, as he said:

"Well, old fellow—it is you! I thought I couldn't be mistaken."

"And so I am, Fraser," answered Mary, briskly; "we can make the place look so nice before he's home, he'll be so surprised."

"Well you are making me feel quite hustling," answered Mrs. Parkins, pleasantly, as she rose from her chair.

"Well, old fellow—it is you! I thought I couldn't be mistaken."

Then the other two men came up, hearty greetings were exchanged all round.

"There's no reason for us to stand out in this fog," said the first speaker; "we're just going in to knock about the balls a bit, and to have a glass—you'll make one of us, Parkins, won't you?"

The other two joined in with.

"Come now, do; you, you must—you are not going to get off in that way."

Tom hesitated and said no, he could not, for he must get home to his wife, but as he spoke the miserable picture of his comfortless home rose before him; and as he glanced at the half open door of the tavern the light and warmth seemed to encourage him to yield to the wishes of his tempters.

"Come now, do! Never mind about the wife; she can spare you for an hour or two."

"Oh, yes; she can spare me well enough!" replied Tom, with some bitterness.

"Well, then, what's to prevent you having a game or two at bagatelle—got something about you I dare say that you would like to double."

And the speaker gave a knowing look at his companions, while Tom answered openly:

"Yes, I've my week's wages, but I should be more afraid of losing it instead of doubling it."

He spoke very firmly, and at the same time pushed out his hand, and wished his tempters good night; but they had no intention of letting their prey slip through their fingers, and they renewed their persuasions that he should make one of them.

Tom wavered, and he began to argue with himself.

"I'll do go in this once, I'm not obliged to become a drinking man, and surely the tavern will be more comfortable than my untidy home!"

But, speaking aloud, he said:

"Well, at any rate, home I must go first, and if I come back I shall be with you in half an hour."

"Better come at once!"

"No, I must go home first."

Tom was a kind-hearted man, and as long as he was in his sober senses he would remain so; his only reason for going home was to let his wife know of his whereabouts for, being a foggy night, he thought she would be uneasy about him.

But this night Tom Parkins, without knowing it, is on the edge of a precipice. The evening that he thinks of spending will be "in the counsel of the ungodly," and among one "scornful." Not that he thinks thus of the companions from whom he has just parted—he tries to persuade himself that they are his friends. Yet Tom Parkins cannot think himself into a comfortable state of mind; playing with edged tools is always dangerous' and so many find to their cost.

Another quarter of an hour has passed since Mrs. Perkins looked out at her door, and her mind is getting seriously uneasy.

The unused teathings are still on the table, but the blaze has died out, and Mrs. Parkins begins almost to give up her idea of waiting for her husband, for she is afraid that the children, who are, as yet, wonderfully good, will get fractious if kept longer without their accustomed meal.

But hark! and she hastens to the door, and listens a moment to make quite sure—yes, she knows the step, and before Tom Parkins can knock, his anxious wife stands at the open door to receive him that he enters not.

"I don't stand in the fog, Jane—I'm not coming in! I'm going to spend an hour or two with some friends to-night—so you needn't be uneasy if I am a bit late," he says, before she can speak a word.

Mrs. Parkin's heart sinks, as she sees all her little plan of tripping tidily, [illegible] and her voice is full of disappointment as she says:

"Oh, Tom! you would be better at home on such a night as this.

It flashed into her husband's mind that so he might if his home were anything like a home, but he only says, a little impatiently:

"There, make haste out of the fog!"

Turning on his heel, he was making off without even a look at the comfortable room that had been made ready for him; but just then the coals in the grate gave a grand crackle, and up sprang a bright flame making such an illumination, and showing Mrs. Parkins' trim figure off to such advantage, that her husband stood for half a second, in speechless amazement.

Without a word, Tom gently pushed his wife into the cottage, and closing the door, he stood staring at the alteration that had taken place in his home—his home! Yes, it was his home; and the good-looking young woman standing by his side firmly reminded that she was as far as she was able to keep it—should never look less attractive than it did to night; and as her husband kissed her she asked:

"You won't go out again to-night, Tom?" And a feeling of delight went through her as she heard the answer—

"No indeed, less—nor any other night, as long as home looks as cozy as this."

So Mr. Parkins, by a near touch, saved her husband from gambling and a public linger, let us hope that the good thus begun may continue.—Bristol Mercury.

A Mechanical Genius.

THERE is a gentleman now living at Port Richmond, Staten Island, named Harland Buell, who is in every sense of the word a genius. Several years ago he conceived the idea that he could build a house, and, not having any business occupation, he set to work, and in less than three years has finished a building which is a model in every respect. It is two stories in height with a cupola, French windows and balcony. All the materials used in the construction have passed through his hands. The foundation is of the usual style, but the outer wall is composed of some material resembling asphalt, the composition of which is known only to the builder. The rooms are large and airy, with hard-polished walls. The parlor has three large French windows, and the ceilings and walls have been finished by him. The mantle-piece is of highly-polished wood, and in the center is carved a dog's head, with chain suspended from the neck. The gentleman who has done all this work has had no help, doing everything himself, thus making the house a real curiosity. Connected with the house is a small frame structure, in which he follows his trade as wheelwright. All the implements in this line was made known to his friends at the age of eleven. While he was working on his father's farm, one of the workmen had bought a watch, but found it would not keep good time and left it one day on a log. In taking it up he found to his surprise that it was running, and exactly right. On inquiring he found that the boy had taken it up into the garret of his father's house, dissected, cleaned and regulated it, with only ordinary tools.

His inventive genius has not confined his efforts to house-building and watch-making, but has been put to the test as a machinist, having just finished a practical steam engine, of sufficient power to run a small lathe and circular saw. He has also manufactured numerous other articles.

Bashfulness.

EVERYBODY laughs at a bashful man. Nobody seems to realize that bashfulness is a misfortune, and no more to be ridiculed than a lame leg, a cough, or a squint eye.

A man cannot help being bashful. Nothing will cure him of it but time and the constant friction of society, and in some cases nothing will effect a radical cure.

A bashful man is forever in the way of somebody. He cannot walk the street without running against every fifth person he meets. He will be so anxious to get out of the way that he will dodge the same way the other man is dodging, and the result will be a collision.

He will tread on the dress of every lady who ventures into his immediate vicinity, and if he can manage to cross a room without turning up most of the rugs, and tripping over an ottoman, or a hassock, he may consider himself fortunate.

The titles will leave the Cockbacks to climb to his back, and then when somebody suppresses a giggle, he will feel as hot as a burnt potato, and regret that he was ever born.

He has the unhappy facility of sitting down on pet kittens, reposing in flinn placidity on choir-cushions, and he steps on dogs' tails, and upsets curb-stones and drops photograph albums, and breaks Sevres kik-knacks, and gets lutbo mess generally.

When some lady friend asks him to button her glove, or put her shawl over her shoulders, he will find his fin in the roots of his hair, and seize the glove in his hand in the haste that the buttonhooke will tear out and the button pull off, and the pulley though she says it is not of the "slightest consequence" will be mad enough to box his ears soundly.

And he will wish the earth would open and swallow him up bodily.

At dinner, though a mem of the very best intentions, he will invariably spill the gravy, and deluge his potatoes with pudding-sauce, and drop his knife in some lady's lap among the lamb and mint, and he is liable to pocket his napkin, and produce it to the drawing room in the place of a handkerchief.

Nothing so completely upsets him as to be obliged to introduce somebody in Shakespeare, he will cut the lady Miss Capt. Brown, and the gentleman Miss Maria Smith, and then discovering his mistake, he will reverse the order of things, and beg to be allowed to present Miss Mazly Brown to Mr. Capt. Smith.

The bashful man is so an utter loss to know what to do with his hands and feet. They are continually in his way, and their proper disposal is a perpetual puzzle to him.

He will sit and compare his two thumbs, and put his two forefingers together—see if not quite sure that they are equal, and his feet are open to the same careful scrutiny.

He is laughed at, as we said, by everybody, and he knows it, and so remorseless. But after all, in this age of cheek (pardon the slang), it is refreshing to meet, occasionally, a bashful man.—Waite Thorn, in N. Y. Weekly.

Live Within Your Means.

LIVE within your means. This is a good rule for office holders and business men generally. When the man of moderate means endeavors to live as expensively as a man of wealth his future can be easily written: a little ephemeral, pleasure-seeking young woman standing by his side firmly resolved that she shall be as far as she was able to keep it—should never look less attractive than it did to night, and as her husband kissed her she asked:

"You won't go out again to-night, Tom?" And a feeling of delight went through her as she heard the answer—

"No indeed, less—nor any other night, as long as home looks as cozy as this."

When some lady friend asks him to button her glove, or put her shawl over her shoulders, he will find his fin in the roots of his hair, and seize the glove in his hand in the haste that the buttonhooke will tear out and the button pull off, and the pulley though she says it is not of the "slightest consequence" will be mad enough to box his ears soundly.

And he will wish the earth would open and swallow him up bodily.

At dinner, though a mem of the very best intentions, he will invariably spill the gravy, and deluge his potatoes with pudding-sauce, and drop his knife in some lady's lap among the lamb and mint, and he is liable to pocket his napkin, and produce it to the drawing room in the place of a handkerchief.

Nothing so completely upsets him as to be obliged to introduce somebody in Shakespeare, he will cut the lady Miss Capt. Brown, and the gentleman Miss Maria Smith, and then discovering his mistake, he will reverse the order of things, and beg to be allowed to present Miss Mazly Brown to Mr. Capt. Smith.

The bashful man is so an utter loss to know what to do with his hands and feet. They are continually in his way, and their proper disposal is a perpetual puzzle to him.

He will sit and compare his two thumbs, and put his two forefingers together—see if not quite sure that they are equal, and his feet are open to the same careful scrutiny.

He is laughed at, as we said, by everybody, and he knows it, and so remorseless. But after all, in this age of cheek (pardon the slang), it is refreshing to meet, occasionally, a bashful man.—Waite Thorn, in N. Y. Weekly.

Live Within Your Means.

LIVE within your means. This is a good rule for office holders and business men generally. When the man of moderate means endeavors to live as expensively as a man of wealth his future can be easily written: a little ephemeral, pleasure-seeking young woman standing by his side firmly resolved that she shall be as far as she was able to keep it—should never look less attractive than it did to night, and as her husband kissed her she asked:

"You won't go out again to-night, Tom?" And a feeling of delight went through her as she heard the answer—

"No indeed, less—nor any other night, as long as home looks as cozy as this."

So Mr. Parkins, by a near touch, saved her husband from gambling and a public linger, let us hope that the good thus begun may continue.—Bristol Mercury.

A Mechanical Genius.

THERE is a gentleman now living at Port Richmond, Staten Island, named Harland Buell, who is in every sense of the word a genius. Several years ago he conceived the idea that he could build a house, and, not having any business occupation, he set to work, and in less than three years has finished a building which is a model in every respect. It is two stories in height with a cupola, French windows and balcony. All the materials used in the construction have passed through his hands. The foundation is of the usual style, but the outer wall is composed of some material resembling asphalt, the composition of which is known only to the builder. The rooms are large and airy, with hard-polished walls. The parlor has three large French windows, and the ceilings and walls have been finished by him. The mantle-piece is of highly-polished wood, and in the center is carved a dog's head, with chain suspended from the neck. The gentleman who has done all this work has had no help, doing everything himself, thus making the house a real curiosity. Connected with the house is a small frame structure, in which he follows his trade as wheelwright. All the implements in this line was made known to his friends at the age of eleven. While he was working on his father's farm, one of the workmen had bought a watch, but found it would not keep good time and left it one day on a log. In taking it up he found to his surprise that it was running, and exactly right. On inquiring he found that the boy had taken it up into the garret of his father's house, dissected, cleaned and regulated it, with only ordinary tools.

His inventive genius has not confined his efforts to house-building and watch-making, but has been put to the test as a machinist, having just finished a practical steam engine, of sufficient power to run a small lathe and circular saw. He has also manufactured numerous other articles.

Bashfulness.

EVERYBODY laughs at a bashful man. Nobody seems to realize that bashfulness is a misfortune, and no more to be ridiculed than a lame leg, a cough, or a squint eye.

A man cannot help being bashful. Nothing will cure him of it but time and the constant friction of society, and in some cases nothing will effect a radical cure.

A bashful man is forever in the way of somebody. He cannot walk the street without running against every fifth person he meets. He will be so anxious to get out of the way that he will dodge the same way the other man is dodging, and the result will be a collision.

He will tread on the dress of every lady who ventures into his immediate vicinity, and if he can manage to cross a room without turning up most of the rugs, and tripping over an ottoman, or a hassock, he may consider himself fortunate.

The titles will leave the Cockbacks to climb to his back, and then when some-

THE NEXT DAY AFTER.

THE story is to tell what happened afterward. There is always a next day to good and bad times, but most stories end before you get to it. I always wanted to know what became of the "Three Little Pigs" after they scribled the Fox to death and what the Bears said when they found that Golden-hair had run away, and I think the man that knows might be made to tell about it. At any rate, I am going to tell you what happened the next day after Capt. Jinks' birthday party.

Jinks had had very few birthdays for a boy of his age—only six all told, and two of those he couldn't remember, which was prima facie evidence that he was not there in person from means plain as the nose on your face), so the whole family had given over arguing with Jinks on that point.

Now the sixth one had come and gone, and there would not be another for a year, Jinks didn't see why. It wasn't like Christmas, which you get on the 25th of July. Folks were always having birthdays, summer and winter, just when they pleased, and why he couldn't, Jinks failed to see. He was standing at the window, squeezing his nose up and down the glass, and wondering how soon somebody would tell him to stop that.

"One birthday a year isn't much; and, oh, I wish I didn't choose mine in winter."

"People don't choose their birthdays," said Molly.

"Who does?" said Jinks, ill-content.

"God does," answered Molly, with just a very little perk of her head.

If she had said the President, as Jinks half expected, he was prepared to express his rebellious sentiments, without fear or favor, but as it was he only scowled and scrupped the carpet with his slipper-toe. Just then pegs came in with his hot in his hand, and stooped down to kiss his little boy good-by.

Jinks brightened up at once.

"Oh! papa, couldn't you go to the office with you? There isn't anything to amuse me home."

"Indeed you said papa, tossing the Captain up in his arms, "is this the young sir that had a birthday party yesterday?"

"Yes, papa," said Molly, "and such a party!"

"And Jinks," said, "and, 'sides, the more fun you have you're all the bi-somer the next day."

"And Jinks is always cross the next day, whether it's a birthday or candy," said Molly, in explanations none.

"Come on, then," said papa, and Jinks ran out of his slippers and into his boots, crushed his cap over his curls, wriggled his arms into his coat-sleeves, and was ready in a minute. Molly was ready, too, and off they went, papa and Jinks, hand in hand, and so fancied he was almost grown, which is sometimes the case with people much older than Capt. Jinks. His papa kept on writing letters until the box was crowded full. Then he pulled out his watch and jumped up so suddenly he almost upset the chair.

"See here, Capt. Jinks, I must be at the Tremont in ten minutes, to meet some gentlemen on business, and I shall be back in time to take you to lunch."

"Papa," called Jinks, "couldn't I?—But papa was out of the door already, and only shouted back to the office.

He sure you get those letters into the mail, and that's the express office."

There was really no help at all, and so Jinks crumbled into the window seat and watched the street-cars. Jinks was literary and in secret ears, because he didn't mean to be a car-driver himself, as soon as he was old enough. He afterward changed his mind, and resolved to be a fireman, because with a hack you can choose your own street and be more independent. But Jinks didn't see his way clear to look back myself. Ity and by Robert began to gather up the letters, and Jinks took down his cap. He liked very much to go to the office with Robert. "It's twelve o'clock," said Robert; "and your father'll come for you directly."

He looked at Jinks, and the popcorn ball that he had eaten began to roll up into his throat. At least it felt like a popcorn ball.

"It'll be here inside of ten minutes," said Robert, encouragingly; "and you may take my knife and whittle. Any one it takes me the best part of an hour to get around; and I stop in home for a bite while I'm down that way."

Poor little Jinks swallowed hard at the popcorn ball and took the knife; but when Robert was actually gone he didn't care much about whittling. What if he should cost his finger, and nobody there to hear him cry. So he went back to the window, and waited and watched. He tried to count the people; but, as he could only count up to ten, he had to begin over again very often. All the men in the world went by except his papa. Jinks was sure of that. His papa had forgotten all about him. Jinks was sure of that, too. Away up the street he could see the restaurant where they always went for lunch. Probably his papa was sitting there now. Jinks was growing indignant.

All I know the way and I'll go my own self." And with this brave resolve he started out. After all, it would be very grand to come marching in all alone; and at the thought Jinks thrust his hands into his overcoat pockets, and felt on one side the two cookies and on the other a five-cent piece. It was the nickel that did the mischief, for Jinks immediately resolved to gratify no one desire of his heart and "have a shine." The emphatic sight of a boot-black down the street, and hurried after him, without noticing that he passed the restaurant on his way. If Jinks lives to be a man he will never feel grander than when he stood at that street-corner, amid a crowd of grinning boys, while two sturdy ragamuffins took it by turns to put a mirror-shine polish onto the little red-topped boots.

"See to shave yerself in them boots Gen'ral," said one of the boys, as Jinks dropped the nickel in his dirty hand.

"Give to yer cussion rogue."

Jinks walked at least three blocks with no thought in his noddle but those boots. How they did shine! He hunted into half every people, in his admiration of those glossy little mischief-makers, that were walking him into trouble as fast as they could run. For by and by Jinks woke up to the fact that he had started to find the restaurant, and had surely lost his way. Silly little lonely. They did not even turn around to look at him, but went on and on, poor little Captain Jinks!

Then Robert came back to the office, leaving a hook on the end of it I caught hold of a long cedar tree about ten feet high, and he scrambled up, with dirty knees and my perch got more and more unsteady, I pulled on the pole and drew the tree over toward the ground. With a desperate exertion and after several minutes of deep anxiety, I succeeded in gaining the cedar and got up a safe position among the branches. The wolves were in a fierce howl and took their departure, but I did not venture to descend from my perch until the last animal had left. Then my faithful beard from the distant hills. On reaching the place where I had left my horse I found that he had got frightened and had gone. I was about striking out on foot, as you would say, in endeavoring to secure the animal, when they had got into a kind of crevasse at the base of a precipice. Into these I managed to force my young mouse, which

A rookkeeper named Hedden, of the Marine Bank, of New York city, has lately absconded, and an examination of his books shows that the bank has been defrauded out of $48,000. It appears that whenever Henry looks a customer of the bank, sent his bank book for deposit, Hedden would raise the amount, say, from $500 to $1,500. Bank-bags were intended, charged with being an enthusiast with Hedden.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the 17th, Senate not in session. But time was done in the House, beyond authorizing the Committee on the Centennial question to sell during the recess of congress, and adopting a resolution of inquiry into the making of contracts for the transportation of army supplies to Texas in 1874. Adjourned to the 20th.

In the 20th, in the Senate, an amendment was agreed to to the House bill to supply the deficiency for meeting the Sioux Indians, such amendment authorizing $150,000 in place of $400,000 for such purpose. The bill to provide for counting the votes for President and Vice-President was taken up, and amendments were offered and debated. A Committee of Conference on the Senate amendments to the Military bill was ordered and appointed....Among the bills introduced in the House were several relating to the currency question. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill for the repeal of the provisions of the Resumption act which authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem and cancel United States notes, and to sell United States bonds for that purpose, was made and rejected—99 to 108, and was lost for the affirmative.

In the 21st, several measures were introduced in the Senate, among them from Good Templars and other Temperance organizations, praying for the passage of a Prohibitory liquor law in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and also for a law prohibiting the sale of liquors among the officials of the civil, military and naval service. A Conference Committee on the Military Academy bill was appointed. The bill to provide for the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President was further considered. Among the bills reported in the House were one to prevent the delegates to any Committee making it a misdemeanor for any employe of the Government to contribute money or funds for election purposes, or to canvass in behalf of any candidate; and another appointment was offered by Mr. Blaine to include Senators and Representatives in the bill, which being objected to a motion was made and carried—to refer to reconsider the vote by which the motion to suspend the rules was agreed to. Such amendment was then offered, as were also several other amendments. A resolution was adopted authorizing Messrs. Noe, Silver and Smith, of the Democratic Post Committee, to appear before the Standard Jury of the District and testify under a subpœna which had been served upon them.

On the 22d, the Senate resumed consideration of the bill providing for the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and several proposed amendments were rejected. In the House the Senate amendments to the bill to supply the deficiency in the appropriation for certain Indian tribes were non-concurred in. The bill reported from the Judiciary Committee prohibiting contributions to election funds by Government officers and employes was taken up, amended and passed—yeas, 173; nays, 5. The bill to prevent any person in office or employe of the Government shall solicit or receive from or give to any other employe or officer, or other person, directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for political purposes, under penalty of being dismissed from service and being deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor and, on conviction, being fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned one year or less; it is also made a misdemeanor to use force, threats, menaces, violence or bribery to influence the election of President, Vice-President, Senator or member of Congress. United States District Courts are given jurisdiction of the offences created by this act.

On the 23d, a bill was introduced in the Senate to prohibit the transportation of build nitro-glycerine, and to regulate the manufacture and dynamite. The bill to regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President was amended so by phraseology without materially altering its meaning. Bills were passed in the House—prohibiting the cutting of timber on any Indian reservation, and lands in possession of Indian title or the right of occupancy has not been extinguished; to reduce the extent of the military reservation at Fort Lamarie, D. T., to an area of fifty feet square unless; repealing the law forbidding the appointment to any position in the army of any person who served in any capacity in the military, naval or civil service of the Confederate States in the late rebellion; and authorizing the location of soldiers' additional public lands within railroad limits. The Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill was considered in committee of the Whole.

Bills were passed in the House—prohibiting the cutting of timber on any Indian reservation, and lands in possession of Indian title or the right of occupancy has not been extinguished; to reduce the extent of the military reservation at Fort Lamarie, D. T., to an area of fifty feet square unless; repealing the law forbidding the appointment to any position in the army of any person who served in any capacity in the military, naval or civil service of the Confederate States in the late rebellion; and authorizing the location of soldiers' additional public lands within railroad limits. The Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill was considered in committee of the Whole.

The Finance Bill Agreed Upon in Caucus.

The Payne bill, as adopted by the recent caucus of the Democratic members of Congress, is as follows:

A BILL to provide for the gradual resumption of specie payments.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury from and after each year, from and after July 1, 1876, and until the 1st day of January, 1879, to receive for duties and other Temperance organizations, praying for the passage of a Prohibitory liquor law in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and also for a law prohibiting the sale of liquors among the officials of the civil, military and naval service. A Conference Committee on the Military Academy bill was appointed. The bill to provide for the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President was further considered. Among the bills reported in the House were one to prevent the delegates to any Committee making it a misdemeanor for any employe of the Government to contribute money or funds for election purposes, or to canvass in behalf of any candidate; and another appointment was offered by Mr. Blaine to include Senators and Representatives in the bill, which being objected to a motion was made and carried—to refer to reconsider the vote by which the motion to suspend the rules was agreed to. Such amendment was then offered, as were also several other amendments. A resolution was adopted authorizing Messrs. Noe, Silver and Smith, of the Democratic Post Committee, to appear before the Standard Jury of the District and testify under a subpœna which had been served upon them.

On the 22d, the Senate resumed consideration of the bill providing for the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and several proposed amendments were rejected. In the House the Senate amendments to the bill to supply the deficiency in the appropriation for certain Indian tribes were non-concurred in. The bill reported from the Judiciary Committee prohibiting contributions to election funds by Government officers and employes was taken up, amended and passed—yeas, 173; nays, 5. The bill to prevent any person in office or employe of the Government shall solicit or receive from or give to any other employe or officer, or other person, directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for political purposes, under penalty of being dismissed from service and being deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor and, on conviction, being fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned one year or less; it is also made a misdemeanor to use force, threats, menaces, violence or bribery to influence the election of President, Vice-President, Senator or member of Congress. United States District Courts are given jurisdiction of the offences created by this act.

On the 23d, a bill was introduced in the Senate to prohibit the transportation of build nitro-glycerine, and to regulate the manufacture and dynamite. The bill to regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President was amended so by phraseology without materially altering its meaning. Bills were passed in the House—prohibiting the cutting of timber on any Indian reservation, and lands in possession of Indian title or the right of occupancy has not been extinguished; to reduce the extent of the military reservation at Fort Lamarie, D. T., to an area of fifty feet square unless; repealing the law forbidding the appointment to any position in the army of any person who served in any capacity in the military, naval or civil service of the Confederate States in the late rebellion; and authorizing the location of soldiers' additional public lands within railroad limits. Nevada Geysers.

The recent remarkable discoveries of ores and minerals of various kinds made in the neighborhood of Steamboat Springs are causing a considerable amount of speculation in regard to what may underlie that region at no very great depth. Some who have been ramblning on the matter are of the opinion that under a crust of 200 or 300 feet in thickness there exists a large lake of boiling water, while others believe that at about the same depth below the surface all is fire and red-hot and it often rocks. Those who advance the first-mentioned theory say that the minerals contained in the water of the boiling lake first formed a crust around the shores, and that this grew in ice grows upon a pond in winter till the concretions covered the whole of the water, except apart below here and there. Through these spots bubbles steam and water were forced up, and thus thickness was gradually added to the crust covering the subterranean lake. They also say that this lake may extend under the greater part of the Truckee meadows, as some years ago, in the excavation of a service earthquake, all the land, both in Steamboat Valley and Truckee Meadows was rolled and tossed like the waves of the ocean.

Those who believe that there is fire somewhere far down in the bowels of the earth say that beds of iron pyrites are necessary to produce the sulphur necessary for the combustion, and all below must be solid, or, at least, that there is no body of water of such extent that it could be called a lake. They also say that there can be no lake, because in certain places there rush up strong blasts, or columns, of hot air, as in geysers, which would, from a point where there is fire, or, at least, great heat, but no water, as no steam is mingled with the gases.

In places a mile or two to the westward of the present springs, where men are now engaged prospecting for sulphur, it is found that at the depth of three or four feet the rock is quite hot, and the sulphur in some of the beds is so hot, when first opened upon, that it cannot be held in the hand. This great heat at a point so far from the present active springs is what has given rise to the belief that a large body of boiling water underlies the whole region.

An experiment that many would like to see tried would be the boring of a hole somewhere in the neighborhood of the present active springs. The rock is somewhat like lava, and would be penetrated very rapidly with a diamond drill or even with ordinary steel boring apparatus.

We are of the opinion that a depth of 200 feet would not be attained before an underground fissure or chamber would be tapped that would throw a stream of water to the height of from 100 to 200 feet, either constantly or at regular intervals. The present proprietor could in no way so cheaply add to the several attractions of the place as by starting a boring for some pipe to purchase." Hedid not mean anything to sell him, however, and went on to say that he believed he wouldn't live long enough to see it, and he would wait until times got better. His real mission was to look over certain pieces of land that he had purchased from the State, 97 7-, to ask a re-fifty-foot square mules; repealing the law forbidding the appointment to any position in the army of any person who served in any capacity in the military, naval or civil service of the Confederate States in the late rebellion; and authorizing the location of soldiers' additional public lands within railroad limits. The Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill was considered in committee of the Whole.

Comparative Longevity.

Dr. Lambert, President of a Life Insurance Company of New York, recently gave an interesting lecture at Music Hall, Boston, on woman and her nature, duties, needs and entitlements.

He discussed the question of the comparative length of life of American men and women, and between people of this country and those of Europe. He showed statistics to prove that, contrary to the popular opinion, the people of New York were longer lived than those of the old world.

The English girls so often spoken of for blooming cheeks and robust forms, owed these qualities to their outdoor life, the damp residence of their native island, and their fondness for the national beverage, beer. The fact was, the women in this country were longer-lived than the English women. There probably was no place in Europe where so many old people could be found in proportion to the population as in New Hampshire, and there on the hill-sides of Massachusetts. They owed it, he contended, to their habits, however, as at this price, one must certify under oath that the land was for farming purposes, or that they do not contain pine timber. If pine lands, the price is $5 per acre. It appears that applications in the vicinity of pine lands are making such large demands for farming lands as to create suspicion, and, as many of these were for a year after year to revert to the State for non-payment of the second of the interest, the suspicion that there was something concealed increased day by day, until it led to an investigation by a detective, as stated above. It was discovered that parties in Manistee had bought a large number of acres of pine land for a song, and were paid seventy-five cents per acre (one-quarter of the purchase money) and after getting the pine off had allowed the land to go back to the State, thus saving the $1.25 per acre. The delay-in-paying-the-kinks in these crooked transactions had not been discovered by the delay-in-paying-the-kinks in these crooked transactions, but one of the delay-in-paying-the-kinks in these crooked transactions, chancery subpœnas upon Messrs. Charles Huggins, D. B. Ruggles, Ed. Buckley and Jas. Ramsdell, which will be served by the sheriff on the 1st of January, at the next term of court, to answer to the demands of the State. It is reported that if the latter were to be making a case out against these gentlemen, the State's fund will correspondly be increased several thousands of dollars.

The place for holding the next State Fair has not been decided to be Jackson, and the time, Sept. 18 to 22.

The latest reports from Detroit give the following as the current prices for leading staples: Barley, No. 2, per cental, $1.05@1.05; Butter, per lb., 26@30c; Cheese, per lb., 12@13c; Corn, per bu., 45@46c; Dressed Hogs, per cental, $8.50@9.00; Flour, White Winter, $6.00@6.50; Amber, $5.75@6.00; Spring, $5.25 per bu., 45@46c; Dressed Hogs, per cental, $8.50@9.00; Flour, White Winter, $6.00@6.50; Amber, $5.75@6.00; Spring, $5.25 per bu., 45@46c; Dressed Hogs, per cental, $8.50@9.00; Oats—Mixed per bu. 35@36c; White, 36@37c; Pork, per bu., 22.75@23.00; Rye, per bu., 70@72c; Wheat—No. 2 White, per bu. $1.29@1.32½; Amber, 1.26@1.29.

—Red Cloud says: "Many moons have gone since the pale faces promised food and blankets to the redmen. The prairie rose has bloomed and faded, the snow has whitened the lofty pine tops, the violet almost buds again, and still the white mentell us to hunt the infrequent buffalo, or arouse from his lair the vicious chipmunk. Brothers, the red man has suffered much, and 13h he hangs! If it ain't time to raise a few scalps."

—He who lives with but the thought that he must sometime die is the craven slave of despondency.

Back Pay.

Some years ago a certain Detroiter settled a ditch, giving his note at sight. The holder tried for two years to collect it, and then filed it away. The other day he had an opportunity to work it off on the magnesian mineral. Its principal use is in the manufacture of Epsom salts, which, it is well known, are employed largely in print works and cotton manufactories as well as by druggists. In England, where Epsom salts are used more than in this country, large quantities of the salts for manufacture is sometimes magnesite and sometimes kaiserite, both of which are in the form of magnesia. They are also considered to be in the best taste, and the most common colors are light blue and light brown. No change is made in style, the bosoms and cuffs being cut plainly. Nine-tenths of the fashionable young men wear standing collars, some styles of which are very high in the neck. Linked sleeve-buttons are finding into favor again. Some very handsome sets consist of studs and buttons connected by a gold chain. In men's neck wear there is almost as endless variety. Some very brilliant scarfs are worn, but men who follow the best fashions must mostly wear plain but rich materials, the cravat must consisting mainly of the ring or gin of which the scarf is fastened or dispensed. Plaid scarfs are becoming very popular. At present most of them are dark in color and intended to be worn with a light pin in the center; but as spring advances, lighter shades will be worn.

Gentlemen's gloves will be worn with one or two buttons. The glove stores present a great variety of shades and colors sufficient to match any matter haberdashery with complexion. A new shade of lavender, very light, and a peculiar shade of brown known as "chevrette," are selling rapidly. Most shoes are laced or gaiter-bralded on the back. Some heavy brahls in fancy colors are favored by purchasers.

The spring style of silk hat is an improvement on previous fashions, being less bell-crowned and heavy in appearance than the hat worn during the fall and winter. Seen from the side it lessens in size slightly toward the top, while a view directly in front shows a slight outward curve. The brim is narrow, with a rolling or very narrow Dittary curve. For full dress the brim is a little wider. Stiff felt hats are much worn. Their brims are usually narrow, the crowns generally of the medium amount of height as for winter hats. Besides black and other dark colors there are mixed grays and browns to be worn during the spring and summer. There are many styles of soft felt hats, ranging from those with a wide brim and low crown to the most dressy, narrow-brimmed hats worn by boys. The light shades of silk hats will not be found in the hat stores until the middle of May.

Fashionable dressmakers say that boots have gone entirely out of fashion, and are now worn only by a sec of old gentlemen who have persisted in wearing them from their preference for them. Buttoned gaiters have been worn almost exclusively by fashionable men during the winter, but as the weather grows warmer the Oxford tie will be the favorite shoe. The style is plain, with rounded toe of medium length. It is somewhat lower in front of the instep, broad, low heel and a single sole of medium thickness, which gives the shoe a neat and not over-full appearance and makes it very comfortable for the foot.—*N. A Bull-Dog Attacking a Train of Cars.

A correspondent of the New York Times writes as follows as an evidence of the courage and pugnacity of the English bull-dog, as exhibited during a journey a few days since in England. A dog of this description, who had never been accustomed to see trains until he came to London, was brought to them, and has made a point of chasing them whenever he has an opportunity of doing so, but, of course, never before in charge of a special or of white dock, and trousers of striped brown or gray cloth, generally of light color. The dog got out at the same way as last year, except that the sleeves are fuller and the skirts a little longer. The binding of narrow braid. The voluceux, except for evening dress, will be of the same material as the coat, and cut high in the waist and single breasted, with notched collar. Trousers will be cut loose and straight. Brown and gray striped cassimeres will predominate as material. For evening dress, when the white vest is worn, light gray will be considered the more becoming for trousers; otherwise either light or dark colors may be worn.

Most business suits and walking suits will be made of Scotch and English plaids in subdued colors or small checks, coat, waistcoat and trousers all of the same cloth. Strongly-marked plaids will be worn only by those persons who desire to be looked at, and will be used for sack suits at a time, and to present a frequent variety in apparel. Small checks, so woven as to make almost imperceptible plaids, are to be much worn. The prevailing style of business coat will be a single-breasted sack coat with one, two or three buttons. When the coat has more than one button, the skirts are cut away sharply from the lower one. A single-breasted, one-button sack coat, cut straight in front, and with "patch" pockets, will be very popular as a coat for the sea-side or country. The business coat will be cut high in the waist, single-breasted and without a collar. The trousers will be fuller than for dress suits, straight and wide at the foot. There will be a great variety in color of business suits, but brown and gray will be most fashionable.

Little change will be made in tail dress coats. The inevitable "swallow tailed" coat will be cut a little fuller in the sleeves, especially at the wrists, and the trousers will be somewhat straighter.

Perhaps the most marked change from last spring in men's fashions is a tendency toward subdued and unobtrusive colors and figures. The more economical and modest in dress will naturally favor it, and the Scotch and English weavers have done much in their work to favor such a tendency in the richer classes. With many fine pieces of English goods, twenty-fly imported, it is difficult to tell without looking closely whether they are plaids or checks so nicely are the different colors blended and arranged. Either at a distance or near at hand, they have a very attractive appearance.

Spring Fashions for Men.

Tun ordinary reception suit, worn at church and at parties and receptions where full dress is not required, consists this season of a double-breasted frock coat, of fine diagonal cloth, either black or dark blue, with pantaloons the same material or of white duck, and trousers of striped brown or gray cloth, generally of light color. NEW YORK, Mar. 29, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL:—

The signs, "Strawberry Short-cake" and "Strawberries and Cream," triumphantly displayed before some of our more enterprising restaurants, is such a strong hint of Spring, that I at once began looking round for corroborative evidence. And sure enough, there in the sheltered corners of the door yards, where the March sun lies the longest, I see numerous little spikes of rich fresh green pushing their way through the grey dust with which winter winds have covered them. And then, to tell the truth, the air does feel a little different since the Equinoctial a little of the North Pole flavor seems to be gone out of it—not very much as yet, but still enough for everything above ground and under ground to notice a change in quality. And the street hucksters too, they welcome it; the apple woman, the Italian bandits who offer us peanuts and candy on every street corner, the poor old chaps who try to keep body and soul together by a very limited traffic in pins, needles and the like. A winter long in rain, snow and gale, they have stuck to their posts with a heroism born of desperation. No one ever sees them sell anything; their whole stock in trade can't amount to more than two or three dollars. Heaven only knows how they have fought the winter's battle, but they have done it in some way, and now that the winds begin to soften and the sun's bright fingers to regain their hold on the earth, one sees their faces relax, their expression of dull endurance and take on a took something akin to content.

The Journeyman printers, to the number of about five hundred, are on a strike, on account of a ten per cent. reduction in wages, which the employers find to be absolutely necessary. The Typographic Union, with its customary arrogance, refuses to recognize the fact that the inflated prices of past years can no longer be sustained, and not only withdraws its members from the offices announcing the reduction, but forces them to patrol the streets, and use every effort to prevent non-union men from working. About thirty days advice on Hook-with's Island would do the leaders of the movement a world of good. The employers, to the number of forty, have banded together for mutual support, and both parties feel confident of success.

April 24th was the day fixed by the court for the hanging of the Hebrew, Rubenstein, who is, I believe, the first of his race upon whom the death penalty has ever been pronounced in this country. The Jews are naturally proud of this race's holding some criminality classical, and thus, although the accused is poor and belongs to the lowest stratum of society, no effort or money has been spared to procure a new trial and acquittal. These efforts were crowned with success just in the nick of time, and the coveted stay of proceedings obtained. The strange circumstance surrounding the case, together with the personal reminiscence of the prisoner, have created an immense public interest in these proceedings.

The number of deaths for 1875, from all causes, in this city, was 30,700, an increase of 1,382 over the number reported for 1874. The greater part of this increased mortality was among children, and no small proportion has probably come from the maladministration of the city public schools. The disregard of the commonest laws of health in these places is monstrous, and has become the subject of a general and just complaint. Many of the buildings devoted to school purposes are miserably inadequate in size, and criminally faulty in construction, both as to light and ventilation. Teachers are crazed by overcrowding carried, that rooms are ranged for forty to fifty pupils are made to hold seventy or eighty each. The greatest evils, of course, result. The trouble is one that is constantly increasing, but as yet no action is proposed by the city government.

Sheriff Conner sold the desks, books, and papers of the late Sammun Bay Company yesterday, at 12 Bowery, to satisfy a judgment of $41,000, obtained by Isaiah Reed, a secretary of the company. The property yielded $60. Rather an inglorious ending for the grand San Domingo scheme, whose projectors were supposed to have a good deal fatter thing than any peddleship.

The performance of "Brass" at the Park Theatre continues to nightly crowd the house, and seems the third in the triad now permanent attractions from which Rose Michel has just been withdrawn. "Brass" has been steadily gaining ground ever since its first production, and its merits as a play are now more fully appreciated. Sir G. F. Rowe is a skilful playwright, and while the plot of "Brass" is very plentiful, it is a thread on which are strung pearls of dialogue and incident sufficiently numerous to keep the boisterous good-humored enjoyment from beginning to end. Mr. Rowe, however, is not only a successful author, but is an unsurpassed character actor as well, and his personation of the central figure—"Wonton Stray"—is the incarnation of cool, imperturbable, admirable cheek: a gorgeous, stupendous liar, who would distract Munchausen himself to despair, but who nevertheless gains our sympathies by his evident good heart and his devotion to the heroine. His catch phrases—"See this ring?" and "There, I assure you"—have been taken up by young New York, and made part and parcel of its peculiar vocabulary. The cast of the play is otherwise exceptionally strong, and the performance very smooth. As soon as they can be spared from New York, Mr. Rowe and "Brass" will make an extended provincial tour.

The recent history of the "Park" has been quite eventful. Two years ago John T. Raymond launched "Col. Sellers" from its boards onto the sea of popularity. Last year came Florence and the "Mighty Dollar," then Jarrett witnessed that extraordinary dramatic digression of ex-Mayor Hall, and its present occupation only relieves its prestige. It is easy, well situated, and is under the management of Mr. William Stuart, whose name is closely associated with the most brilliant portion of New York's dramatic history. Under his management of the Winter Garden occurred many memorable successes.

It was here that Edwin Booth achieved glory in his great Shakespearian characters, Miss Isherson in "Leah," Agnes Robertson in "The Octoroon," and John S. Clarke in "Pe Boots." It was here, in 1864, that Mr. Stuart brought out "Julius Cæsar," with the three Booths—Junius Brutus, Edwin, and John Wilkes—in the cast; and it was Mr. Stuart who, years ago, at Wallack's, introduced Matilda Heron in her great creation of "Camille," which she gave for over one hundred nights. In the management of the Park Theatre, Mr. Stuart is ably assisted by Mr. Charles Fulton, well known in literary circles as a successful dramatist, who has occupied the post of director ever since the opening with "Col. Sellers."

MALSNETIC OINTMENT

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of Vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of vegetable extracts, which he has named the Malsnetic Ointment, the point of the attacks of Malaria.

His discovery consists in a combination of those powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of every form of disease for which it is recommended, has well entitle Dr. Trask to a full and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the various viscera of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a comforting power is generated which must necessarily, and in a short period, entirely cure any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every tube and tissue, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence, illness it cures as readily with internal as external use.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients as near the grave as the most powerful internal remedies failed in producing any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with this disease where the Malsnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever presented. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In wounding cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in three minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is a specific.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Scrofula Sore Throats, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colds, Chronic Mothers, Acne in the Face or Breast, Burns, Scald Head, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, &c., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Malsnetic Ointment.

Sold by Druggists and Storekeepers throughout the United States, Canada, and Europe.

Price 50 cents per box.

Dr. Trask's Pain Extractor, for internal and external use, will be found a valuable assistant to the Ointment in many cases. Price $1 per bottle.

Dr. Trask's Magnetic Pills are a mild and effective cathartic, and will be found a valuable remedy in all cases where a cathartic is required. Price 25 cents per box.

THE GUIDE-POST.

Suggested by Harvard Taylor from the Allyman (an German dialect of John Peter Bebel.)

I'M a fellow that travels on the high turf of fame!
At a book-stall my left leg I rest on the lame,
And place your school-field hour by hour
Till mid-night—ten, till shine of stars.

You peg away the live-long day,
Nor half admit, nor gape around;
And that's the road to the miserable floor,
And into the kitchen, I'll be bound!

D'YE know the road where the dollars are?
Follow the red cents here and there;
Yes, it is many leagues from I guess
It won't find dollars anywhere.

D'YE know the road to Sunday's rest?
Just then I of week days be absorbed,
In field and workshop day by day,
And Sunday come I feel I've labored.

D'YE know what road to honor leads?
And good odd-sick?—A lovely sight!
By way of temperance, honest deeds,
And truth to do yr duties right.

And where the road to-day any elder,
And can't to doubt which one it is,
Ground-air and every countenance glows—
Thank God, I've had much asides!

Yes, lovin' God, but lordly more!
I'm called to be an honest child;
You find the grass-box go slow,
And sometimes for you I other side.

THE FATAL NAIL.

ON the evening of June 30, 1837, a peddler on horseback stopped at the smithy of one John Steele, on the outskirts of the town of Pickhill, near Doncaster, England. Several persons were in the smithy at the time besides the blacksmith and his son Richard. The peddler asked Steele to shoe his horse as quickly as he could, as he wished to reach Doncaster early and get a bed at his old place, for the next day being "Stannes," or fair, a number of visitors would be looking for accommodation.

While the smith was attending to the peddler's horse another stranger arrived, also on horseback, and likewise desiring the smith's services, while horse had cast a shoe.

The two strangers and the loungers got into conversation, and the peddler finally opened a mahogany case which was suspended by a strap from his shoulder, and exhibited his stock, which consisted of rings, gold and silver chains, watches, etc. On the last comer's hearing that the peddler was going to Doncaster he offered to accompany him, as he was going in the same direction; adding that as he was a stranger the peddler might take him to some house where he could get accommodation. The peddler replied that he was going to the "Traveler's Rest," on the outskirts of Doncaster, as it was a good house and he knew the landlord.

When the smith removed the shoe from the horse of the last comer he examined it closely, remarking that it had been made in Holderness, pointing to the fact that the nail was peculiar, the head having a half split in the head, and saying that it was a Holderness fancy.

"I'll keep this nail," the smith said, and he drove it as a wedge into the handle of a small hammer, where it passed through the head.

The peddler paid for a flagon of ale, and they stood talking and drinking for some time. When the blacksmith joked the peddler about being in such a hurry when he first came in, he laughed and said:

"Oh, that's all right. I've made up my mind to sleep in the big outhouse, where I have often slept before; it's comfortable."

When the two men were ready to depart the peddler took a large wallet from the valise on his saddle-bow and paid the smith. The peddler seemed to make a rather ostentatious exhibition of his wallet, which was crammed with bank notes and gold.

The two men rode off together, and the smith closed his place and closed it for the night. In due time the peddler and his new friend reached the Traveler's Rest, and said the landlord they would sleep in the outbuilding in the rear, in which there were several beds. The landlord said there was good accommodation there, and gruffly assented to make them room for the night. The peddler retired first, and the stranger remained behind to have supper and liquor over his ale. Before the stranger left the outbuilding, and five minutes later the landlord observed the light put out.

Next morning neither the peddler nor his friend appeared, and the landlord went to the outbuilding to arouse them. He found the door open, and on entering the room discovered the peddler in his shirt lying on the floor at the far end in a pool of blood. His head was battered in, and near him was lying a hammer with blood and hair on the head. He was dead and cold.

When the alarm was given it was found that the horse belonging to the man who accompanied the peddler to the inn and occupied the same room with him, was missing, and suspicion at once fell on him as the murderer. The authorities were notified, and officers were in pursuit of the supposed assassin before the day was six hour older. They tracked him to Coumbre, but lost trace of him just outside the town, on the road to Sheffield. The keen eyes of the officers, however, caught sight of a horse among the bramble in a valley to the left of the road, and there the man was captured. He was terribly frightened—so much so as to be unable to articulate for some time. Strapped to his saddle-bow was a valise, and on opening it a heavily-filled wallet, identified as the peddler's, was found.

Before the Coroner, the prisoner, who said his name was Henry Scott told a most astounding story. He said that after he went to the outhouse the peddler had already gone to his bed, which was a high, old-fashioned tent bed, with curtains. Scott took a bed at the opposite end of the room. This bed has curtains which at the room was large and draughty. He placed his clothes on a chair and flung his valise or holsters, on a bit of carpet at one side of the bed. When he put out the light he observed that the moon was shining full into the room. He lay awake for some time, and presently heard loud snoring in the bed at that end. At that moment the curtain at his bed was gently drawn, and he saw a face looking down upon him. He lay quite still, though greatly alarmed. The face disappeared, and retreating steps were heard. He arose on his elbow and peered through the curtain. He distinctly saw two men at the farther end of the room, near the peddler's bed. They passed round the foot of it and disappeared at the other side. That moment he heard a scream and a scuffle, and saw the legs of the peddler protrude from the curtains. There was a scuffle and a suppressed cry, and next moment the peddler himself from the bed and ran, screaming "murder," toward Scott's bed, holding his valise as arm's length. Two men followed the fugitive, and Scott, terrified and fear stricken, slipped from his bed on the other side and hid himself in a closet. He heard the groans and blows, and then the men carried out a bed at his side. Presently he heard them return, and all was still. The next instant, however, the door opened, other footsteps were heard along the floor at the curtains of Scott's bed were hastily drawn. The visitant, whoever he was, uttered an oath of disappointment and left from the room.

After waiting for some time, Scott came forth from the closet, and found the peddler lying on the ground, dead. Scott was in a terrible dilemma and saw at a glance that he would be suspected of having murdered the peddler. Panic-stricken, he hastily dressed himself, picked up his valise from the floor, took his horse from the stable and departed from the inn, reaching Sandy early in flight. It was daylight when he reached Coumbre, and then for the first time he discovered that the valise which he had taken from the floor was not his, but the peddler's, which he had no doubt dropped when the murderers fell upon him, and in the place of which they doubtless seized and carried off Scott's, which lay on the carpet close by.

This extraordinary story was not believed by the coroner's jury in the face of all the damning evidence against Scott. It was shown that he had been the only one to produce his wallet from the valise in the blacksmith shop, that he offered to accompany the peddler to Doncaster, and that he had taken up his quarters at the same inn, and slept in the same room with the murdered man. Besides this, Scott was captured with the valise in his possession, and what better evidence of his guilt could there be?

Scott was sent to jail, and in due course tried for willful murder. Out of charity a young lawyer undertook his defense. The evidence for the prosecution was clear and convincing, and Mr. O'Brien—afterward Sergeant O'Brien—the prisoner's counsel, saw no chance for his client's escape. The principal witnesses against him were the blacksmith, John Steele, his son Richard, the men that were in the smithy when the peddler and Scott first entered, the landlord of the inn, who swore that Scott urged the peddler to go to another inn, and the officers who found Scott with the peddler's valise in his possession.

The hammer with which the murder had been committed was produced on the trial and shown to the jury. One of them remarked to the court that it was a blacksmith's sledging hammer. Mr. O'Brien quickly asked to be allowed to look at it, and he examined it closely. Then he stood up and handed it to the prisoner. Scott changed his eye over it for a moment, and then handed it back to his counsel. The next instant he clutched it, threw it from Mr. O'Brien's grasp and rushed the foot of it and disappeared at the other side. That moment he heard a scream and a scuffle, and saw the legs of the peddler protrude from the curtains. There was a scuffle and a suppressed cry, and next moment the peddler himself from the bed and ran, screaming "murder," toward Scott's bed, holding his valise at A Novel Testimonial Work.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely vegetable preparation made from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California. Their wonderful curative properties are due to a fact that they are the Great Blood Purifier and a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. No disease or illness can long exist where these Bitters are taken according to direction and the vital organs have not been entirely destroyed by the use of mineral poisons or other means, or the climax of old age reached. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs in Bilious Diseases. For Diseases of the Blood, Skin, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder complaints they have no equal. They act on all impurities of the blood, whether arising from a sedentary life or high living, in the first stages of disease, and are the best preventive of fever, yellow fever, bilious fever, etc., that can be taken. Keep the blood pure by the occasional use of a few bottles of Vinegar Bitters, and no poisonous matter will be developed. Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms are the offspring of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove its curative effect, or for a case of Chronic disease, will satisfy the most incredulous of its merits. Such diseases are caused by vitiated blood, which is generally produced by a disordered state of the digestive organs.

THE NEWS.

A REMON prevailed in St. Petersburg, on the 25th, that the Czar of Russia had signified his intention of resigning the cares of state for a season and retire to Italy for rest. He would appoint the Czarewitch as Regent.

THE dykes surrounding the town of Herzogenbusch, Holland, have been swept away by recent floods. At last accounts thirteen was entirely isolated. Railroad bridges and roads had been destroyed, a hundred houses had disappeared, and 6,000 persons were homeless.

THE American Episcopal Church in Rome, Italy, was consecrated by Bishop Littlejohn, of Long Island, on the 25th.

THE Executive Committee of the New York State Central Democratic Greenback Committee has called a State Convention, to meet in New York city, June 1, to choose delegates to the National Democratic Convention at St. Louis.

THE Iowa Democratic State Convention for the selection of delegates to the Democratic National Convention has been called to meet at Des Moines on the 8th of May.

ACCORDING to a Havana telegram of the 26th, the summons of Prince Milan to Nikola and other Montenegrins to abandon the insurrection had been disregarded.

ADVANCE sheets of the St Louis directory place the population of that city at 498,182.

THE details of the loss of the British emigrant ship Strathmore have just come to hand. She struck on the rocks to the north the Orozet Islands in the South Pacific, on the 1st of last July, and went to pieces almost at once. Forty-four of her passengers and crew were drowned. The survivors reached one of the islands, where they remained without shelter for six months, subsisting on birds and birds' eggs until they were rescued about Jan. 1, 1876, by the Captain of an American whaler.

ACCORDING to a Constantinople dispatch of the 27th the Ottoman Bank had refused to make further advances to the Turkish Government.

THE first Chinese locomotive lately made its trial trip on the railway near Shanghai.

THE Chinese contributions to the Azarican Centennial Exposition are valued at $100,000.

THE United States Supreme Court has affirmed the decision of the lower court in the Grant Parish (La.) cases, in substance that those cases do not properly come within the scope of the Enforcement acts; that the State Courts should take cognizance of such offenses. The cause was remanded with instructions to discharge the defendants. In the Kentucky election cases the Supreme Court decides that the Federal election law is unconstitutional, and that Congress has not power to appropriate legislation the punishment for the offense charged.

HIGH water in the streams of New England has put a stop to the operation of many of the mills, and serious damage has been done by floods in many localities. The town of Holyoke, Mass., was entirely swept away on the 26th, and the town of Chilton was also seriously damaged by the gaining of a dam.

THE boot factory of Claflin & Coburn at Hopkinton, Mass., was burned on the 26th, involving a loss of $100,000.

THE boiler of a locomotive on the Glasgow & Southern Railroad exploded at Glasgow, Scotland, on the 28th. Five persons were killed outright and nine badly injured.

ADJUTANT Washington, dispatch states that United States Treasurer New has withdrawn his resignation for the present, at the request of the President.

EX-MINISTER SCHENCK appeared before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on the 28th. He denied that he was concerned in the matter of selling a worthless mine to English capitalists, and said he would be able to prove that he had never been paid for the shares he holds under an honorary election of their value; that he had sustained a serious loss from the investment; that the failure of the mine was owing to mismanagement, and that, properly worked, it was as valuable, in proportion, as it was originally represented to be.

THE New Jersey Democratic State Convention for the selection of delegates to the National Democratic Convention will be held at Trenton on the 23d of May.

A DISCUSSION in favor of woman suffrage was delivered in the Massachusetts House of Representatives on the 28th — 125 to 77.

A YAZOOVIAN (D. T.) dispatch of the 29th says a miner had just returned from the black Hills, bringing $300 worth of gold. He had one nugget weighing twenty dollars.

THE severest snow-storm of the season visited a large portion of the West on the night of the 27th and the day following. Railroad travel was obstructed over many of the routes.

GOV. KELLOGG, of Louisiana, has addressed an order to the District-Attorney of Baton Rouge, instructing him to take proceedings in the courts in relation to the recent troubles there. The Governor says he is informed that the Parish Judge and State and Parish Tax-Collector had been driven from the parish in violation of the law. The Tax-Collector was appointed some three years ago, and is a colored man. The Judge is a constitutional officer, elected by the people.

LORDON dispatches of the 29th say that the Russian press had changed front in regard to the Turkish question and now demanded that Herzegovina should be ceded to Montenegro. Vienna telegrams of the same date say that a committee of Bosnian refugees had telegraphed to the Grand Vizier, begging them in the name of God not to send them back to Turkey. The Turkish Pacification Committee had issued a proclamation, giving refugees a month to return to their homes, after which the property of the absentees would be confiscated.

STRICKLEES, BRUCKNER & Co., London shipping merchants, have failed, with liabilities exceeding $200,000.

THE Secretary of the Treasury has directed the retirement at $188,144, being eighty per cent, of the new National Bank circulation issued during March.

THE Vermont Republican State Convention was held on the 29th, and delegates to the National Convention were chosen. The Judiciary Committee presented the report of the subcommittee of ex-secretary Belknap, which were received and ordered printed. The bill for the issue of silver coin in place of fractional currency was taken up and amended. An evening session was held, at which the Legislative Appropriation bill was considered.

Disasters by Floods in New England.

BOSTON, March 27.

The damage by the freshets and floods which over New England must have been over $1,000,000, and perhaps a dozen lives were lost. Minimum Mill River disasters were seen on all sides. The city was comparatively unharmed, choked sewers and cesspools being the worst. Reports from Clinton, Mossy Bend, which furnishes a lignol plateau of 150 acres, gave way and washed away a large quantity of lignol from its foundations, four tenement houses frosted off, and 100 rods of fence and road were washed away. At Fulberville the wooden mill buildings were swept away and a vestige left. The damage in the Shetucket, Quinebeng, and Yantic Valleys alone was hundreds of thousands in Norwich the streets were overflowed, and thousands were excitedly helping to save property. At the foot of Shetucket-street Hill the water was two feet deep, and on the wharves themselves, considerably eight feet or more above the water, men were navigating in boats and on rafts. The Baltic dam gave way at about noon, and soon the stream began to rise rapidly, and on its foaming bosom came down bags of cotton, whisky barrels, a buzz saw and tables and all sorts of furniture. The water was thirteen inches higher than in the great flood of 1857, and five inches higher than in 1867, when there was a destructive freshet at Baltimore. A boat was capsized and four lives lost at Versailles. Mrs. Coleman, who had become a mother but three days before, jumped from a window and was drowned with her babe. At Taftville George Black-man was caught while in a boat, with the current at fifteen knots, and for the Manchester River Improvement Company at from seven to fifteen knots.

The contract for building the Marquette & Mackinaw Railroad has been awarded to Ingalls Brothers, represented by H. B. Cramer, of New York.

Counting the Electoral Vote.

The joint resolution, which was recently passed by the United States Senate, prescribes the mode for Article 12 of the Constitution a new article, of which the main features are the following:

"The electors are to ballot in their respective States for President and Vice-President as at present, but the list of votes must be sent to the presiding Justice of the United States Supreme Court. The Supreme Court, at a time and place to be fixed by law, is to publicly open all the certificates and count the votes, and the person having the greatest number of votes for President considered by the court to have been duly elected, given and certified, shall be President if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors lawfully appointed. If no person has such majority the vote of the two highest on the list shall be counted for President. A quorum is to consist of a member, or members, from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of the States shall be necessary for a choice. The voting must continue until a President is elected; in case the House fails to elect before the 4th of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of electoral votes for Vice-President, to be counted and determined as above provided, shall be Vice President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors. If no person is then elected the Senate is to choose a Vice-President by a majority of the whole membership. Finally, it is provided that no House of the Senate shall be eligible or elected as President or Vice-President who shall not have been a citizen of the United States."

Crowner's Quest Law.--Rail Road Riot--Shooting Under Broadway--Brazil to the Front.

Jay Gould on Gambling--An Eclipsed Eclipse

Amusements.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Apr. 6, 1876

TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL:—

A recent most revolting outrage, perpetrated under cover of the Revised Statutes, has raised a storm about the maladministration of "Crowner's 'quest law," as it is called. A respectable woman hangs her way in a stormy night, walked off the dock into the East River and was drowned. Her body was discovered next morning, but in accordance with the traditions of this absurd law, no one was allowed to take it from the water till the coroner gave permission. Even the woman's husband, frantic with grief and indignation, was forbidden by the police to touch it, and for twenty four hours was obliged to pace the dock near which the body of his wife floated in the full gaze of the gaping crowd, until at last one of the four lazy and heartless officials who hold inquests upon New York's unfortunate dead at $15,000 per year spared, inside his appearance, and the shameful spectacle came to an end. It is seldom that the big and busy city gets so roused over anything not affecting its general interests, and as the investigation which has been set on foot, reveals unlimited brutality and abuse, it will go hard but some of the official heads tumble into the basket. A change in the law covering such cases is also strenuously advocated.

And yet again, does the Elevated Railroad trouble obtrude itself upon our attention, not the new one proposed for the East side this time, but the one already established on the West side. In preparing to put down a new switch on Greenwich street, the company's men have broken through into the cellar vaults of a hotel, which mishap acted as the straw which broke the camel's back. The hotel men, backed by other property-owners, turned out in force sufficient to clean out the railroad party and the few policemen who interfered. Brick bats flew and crowns were cracked, until the arrival of more police averted what might now have become a serious riot. The property-owners have got out an injunction against further work. They would evidently like to see this enterprise share the fate of the pneumatic railway, the tunnel for which was dug under Broadway years ago, and when the scheme was shelved on account of opposition and lack of means, was closed up till it was almost forgotten by New Yorkers themselves. Some months ago, however, some born Yankee got possession of the hole, and made thereof a rifle range, which is now largely patronized to his great gain. The tunnel is a circular iron tube cased in brick, some eight feet in diameter, and running under Broadway from the new City Hall down to the Post Office. Standing at the shooting place and looking away off through the dim blue smoke to where, hundreds of feet distant, the white targets glimmers in the light of strong reflectors it is not easy to realize that we are in the heart of a great city. Only the distant thunder of the rumbling vehicles overhead bears witness to the locality.

As may be supposed, the detention of the gun in this confined space is almost overpowering. It is like being shut up in a big hogshead with a gigantic fire cracker, and to a nervous person would be sufficient to deter him from this amusement. The thought that men and women were to have been shot up and down this tube from one end of town to the other, like peas from a popgun, goes far toward reconciling the beholder to the failure of the enterprise. It is true that the elevated railway would have been a snail to it, but then there is such a thing as too "rapid transit."

It is now settled that our democratic but title loving people are to have an opportunity, within a comparatively few weeks, of feasting their eyes upon a real live Emperor, in the person of Don Pedro II., of Brazil, who is attracted hitherward by the reported wonders of the Centennial. This being the first visit of the kind Uncle Sam has ever received, coupled with the fact that this monarch is one of the most liberal and enlightened of reigning sovereigns, New York is naturally on the qui vive to behold and welcome our illustrious guest. In view of the universal attraction this attracted to Dom Pedro and his wonderful land, Frank Lesnie's popular Monthly for April contains, among its host of good things (including a graphic sketch of foreign travel, by Mr Leslie himself), an interesting article on Brazil, the illustrations of which embrace a port sit of the Emperor and Empress, and an elegant colored frontispiece representing the harbor of Rio Janeiro, the scene of the recent accident to the "Helvetius," just as she was leaving port with the imperial party. And in passing, it may of interest to state that the engravings in this one number alone of this marvelous periodical, cost over four thousand dollars.

That eminent and exemplary financier, Mr. Jay Gould, shows by his action in a case now pending, that it makes as much difference to him whose ox is gored as it does to any one else. While not at all averse himself to cornering and squeezing his lesser brethren of the street, he can't express a slight "repeal" which his favors are reciprocated in kind. Some time ago this worthy man made one of the common lots on the price of gold by buying or selling for future delivery, and supposing the thing to be in his own hands, as usual, placidly awaited results. But for some reason the "kingfisher" was for once a little out in his calculations, and at the appointed time gold took the wrong turn. Had everything gone all according to his programme, Mr. Gould would of course have insisted on collecting the difference, and would have pocketed it with a bland smile, worthy of the "Heathen Chinee." But when it came to a demand on his own cash box for forty or fifty thousand dollars, the whole transaction suddenly took on a very different aspect. He at once perceived that the whole system was wrong and this particular transaction especially unsound. He therefore refused payment, and on being sued, comes into court and confesses that he has been gambling in gold, and pleads that his loss being a gambling debt, is not collectible. It is to be hoped that this heroic defense will be as successful in saving Mr. Gould's pocket, as it is in showing his position in public estimation.

We had down on our programme of attractions for March 25th, a partial eclipse of the sun, but the busy body clouds that are forever getting in the way at such times, coolly planted themselves in front of the orb of day and frowned down at scientific New York the historic inquiry, "What are you going to do about it?" which conundrum proving a puzzler, scientific New York only growled a little and at once set to work calculating when they would get another chance to see the same, again, which proved to be in 1878.

Yours,

RADIN.

DR. A. TRASK'S

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask has engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of vegetable extracts which he has named the Magnetic Ointment, since interpreted by the people of Marietta,

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success of Trask's Ointment in application to all forms of Diseases, is the best evidence of the great discovery of the age, and calls for a trial of its claims hereinafter set forth properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means Inflammation, the cause of nine out of every ten sufferings of disease, which exists can be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the animal frame; every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it cures as readily with internal as external disease.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford some relief to the worst sufferer in the first application. Read the following:

For Nervous Diseases this ointment is unknown to fail.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Ulcerated sore Throat, Bronchitis, Fresh or Chronic Colds, Chills, Chilblains, Sprains, Pain or Bruise, Burns, Scald Head, Sciatica, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Sweld Face, Piles, &c., &c., &c. Be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Crowner's Quest Law -- Rail Road Riot- Shooting Under Broadway--Brazil to the Fr'nt.

Jay Gould on Gambling--An Eclipsed Eclipse

Amusements.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Apr. 6, 1876

TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL:—

A recent most revolting outrage perpetrated under cover of the Revised Statutes, has raised a storm about the maladministration of "Crowner's 'quest law," as it is called. A respectable woman losing her way in a stormy night, walked off the dock into the East River and was drowned. Her body was discovered next morning, but in accordance with the traditions of this admiral-law, no one was allowed to take it from the water till the coroner gave permission. Even the woman's husband, frantic with grief and indignation, was forbidden by the police to touch it, and for twenty-four hours was obliged to pace the dock near which the body of his wife floated in the full gaze of the gaping crowd, until at last one of the four lazy and boastless officials who hood-winks us in New York's unfortunate dead at $17,000 per year, appeared, made his appearance, and the shameful spectacle came to an end. It is seldom that the big and busy city is so roused over anything not affecting its general interests, and as the investigation which has been set on foot, reveals unlimited brutality and abuse, it will go hard but some of the official heads tumble into the basket. A change in the law governing such cases is also strenuously advocated.

And yet again, does the Elevated Railroad trouble obtrude itself upon our attention, not the new unexplained for the East side this time, but the one already established on the West side. In preparing to put down a new station on Greenwich street, the company's men have broken through into the second vaults of a hotel, which mishap acted as the straw which broke the camel's back. The hotel men, backed by other property-owners, turned out a force sufficient to clean out the railroad party and the few policemen who interfered. Brick bats flew and cowards were cracked, until the arrival of more police averted what might soon have become a serious riot. The property-owners have got out an injunction against further work. They would evidently like to see this enterprise share the fate of the pneumatic railway, the tunnel for which was dug under Broadway years ago, and when the scheme was abandoned on account of opposition and lack of means, was closed up till it was almost forgotten by New Yorkers themselves. Some months ago, however, some born Yankee got possession of the hole, and made the roof a rifle range, which is now largely patronized to his great gain. The tunnel is a circular iron tube cased in brick, somewhat less in diameter, and running under Broadway from the new City Hall down to the Post Office. Standing at the shooters' place and looking away off through the thin blue smoke to where, hundreds of feet distant, the white target glimmers in the light of strong reflectors it is not easy to realize that we are in the heart of a great city. Only the distant thunder of the rumbling vehicles over head bears witness to the locality.

As may be supposed, the detonation of the gun in this confined space is almost overpowering. It is like being shut up in a big logshead with a gigantic fire-cracker, and as a nervous person would be sufficient to deter him from this amusement. The thought that such old women were to have been shut up and shot in this tube from one end of town to the other, like peas from a popgun, goes far toward reconciling the beholder to the failure of the enterprise. It is true that the elevated railway would have been a small tax to pay for the right to such a thing as two "rapid transits."

It is now noised that our democratic but title-loving people are to have an opportunity, within a comparatively few weeks, of feasting their eyes upon a real live Emperor, in the person of Don Pedro II., of Brazil, who is attracted hitherward by the reported wonders of the Centennial. This being the first visit of the kind Uncle Sam has ever received, coupled with the fact that this monarch is one of the most liberal and enlighted of reigning sovereigns, New York is naturally on the qui vive to behold and welcome our illustrious guest. In view of the universal attraction this attracted in Dom Pedro and his wonderful land, Frank Leslie's popular Monthly for April contains, among its host of good things (including a graphic sketch of foreign travel, by Mr. Leslie himself), an interesting article on Brazil, the illustrations of which embrace a portrait of the Emperor and Empress, and an elegant colored frontispiece representing the harbor of Rio Janeiro, the scene of the recent accident to the "Helvetius," just as she was leaving port with the Imperial party. Said in passing, it may of interest to state that the engravings in this one number alone of this universally patronized, cost over four thousand dollars.

That eminent and exemplary financier, Mr. Jay Gould, shows by his action in a case now pending, that it makes as much difference to him whose ox is gored as it does to any one else. While not at all averse himself to collecting and squeezing his lesser brethren of the street, he can't repress a slight "squeal" when his favors are reciprocated in kind. Some time ago the worthy man made one of the common bets on the price of gold by buying or selling for future delivery, and supposing the thing to be in his own hands, as usual, placidly awaited results. But for some reason the "kingfish" was for once a little out in his calculations, and at the appointed time gold took the wrong turn. Had everything gone off according to his programme, Mr. Gould would of course have insisted on collecting the difference, and would have pocketed it with a broad smile, worthy of the "Heathen Chinee." But when it came to a demand on his own cash-box for forty or fifty thousand dollars, the whole transaction suddenly took on a very different aspect. He at once perceived that the whole system was wrong and this particular transaction especially unsound. He therefore refused payment, and on being sued, comes into court and confesses that he has been gambling in gold, and pleads that his loss being a gambling debt, is not collectible. It is to be hoped that this heroic defence will be as successful in saving Mr. Gould's pocket, as it is in raising his position in public estimation.

We had down on our programme of attractions for March 23th, a partial eclipse of the sun, but the hazy-body clouds that are forever getting in the way at such times, coolly planted themselves in front of the orb of day and frowned down at scientific New York the historic inquiry, "What are you going to do about it?" which conundrum proving a puzzler, scientific New York only growled a little and at once set to work calculating when they would get another chance to see the same again, which proved to be in 1878

Yours,

RADIX.

DR. A. TRASK'S

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the power of which in removing disease, restoring and preserving health, is truly wonderful. This remarkable combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment,

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of diseases, stamps it as more as the greatest discovery of the age, and gives it a trial and close investigation of its merits.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained from any other known combination. This is the secret of its wonderful combinations, that it pervades, in every portion of the human frame, every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament, is reached out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. hence is equal as readily with internal as external disease.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients, in case the grave that the most powerful mineral remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with the Diseases where the Magnetic Ointment can be administered.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Ophthalmia or Painful Sore Throat it is unrivalled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in three minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of inestimable value.

For Diseases of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Stomach and Liver Disease, Dyspepsia, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face or Bones, Sores, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Piles, Fever Sores, etc., it will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

AN EASTER CAROL.

"Sweetly the birds are singing
On earth's dark, dreary shore,
Sweetly the bells are ringing
O'er Easter morn,
And the words that they say
On Easter day
Are—"Christ the Lord is risen."

Birds! I need not your singing
At Easter dawn;
Bells! I've power ringing
In the depths of the year
When Easter's gone;
Songs—"Christ the Lord is risen"

Birds! we will soon be flowers,
Cheery and stirless;
Sometimes we are changing to showers,
Kisses to bless;
While the unbinding of spring,
Oh—sweetly sing—
"Let Christ the Lord is risen."

Easter buds were growing
Anew ago;
If your lilies were blowing
By the waters now
All that we was glad,
Not a creature was sad,
For Christ the Lord was risen
Hymns of Christmas to All Seasons.

A NOBLE OCCUPATION.

[Extracts from a Sunday Sermon by Prof. David Swing, of Chicago.]

He finds it easier—that is easy.

In the parables of Christ, which all these words are taken, Christ speaks of an exercise spirit as having wandered all over the country, or finding it suitable during a long place. So the itinerant fiend concluded to reward the human being out of whom it had been expelled. It must have been surprised to find the old heart empty and idle, ready not only for the return of a faithful children from boyhood to manhood in all the grandeur of middle life and old age. It is an Elijah's chariot ready to pass upward on bright clouds.

It is, hence, a fearful injury done the mind when one is bound up in a pursuit in a course short of being honorable. To be secretly and dishonorably extracting money out of an office or a profession, to have a business which one must conceal from his friends, is not only to run the risk of a punishment in eternity, but it is to secret of an awful punishment on the shores of time. The mind and soul lose their buoyancy. The night comes without eternal memory, the morning dawns without hope. There are blight and winds everywhere, gifted brains in this city, which are being wrecked, starved, murdered by the ingenuity of the parents to which they have been dragged through the late months or years. But though much remains to be said upon the subject, it is not the object of activity. Like the flesh of lightning, the soul must strike or somewhere, either among the clouds, causing the summer rain, or upon the cottage's summer death in the mutual. To be without a noble occupation is, therefore, not to be simply idle, or to be a non-producer, but it is to be hovering as a gravelling, corroding force, that, having no food to digest, will attack the stomach and digest the very source of life. Hence came the aphorism that "an idle brain is the devil's workshop." A force is acting that craves something to do, just as the drunkard craves its cup; and so no value the work is on hand to meet the drawing of the mind's appetite, and, lo, the devil can rush into that brain and make it a shop of all acts and crafts to his malicious fancy. Pain, in seeking a soul's essential life, says, in its poetic manner "The bees pursuit no drones to dwell among them, but kill any bees that begin to grow idle." In his "Anatomy of Melancholy" Burton says: "Idleness is the bane of the body and mind, the step-mother to discipline, the chief author of mischief, one of the seven deadly sins, the cushion upon which the devil reposes." Thus the absence of an occupation does not leave us in peace, but in the very depth of emptiness, for it leaves us with a great unbridled power moving to and fro every day in the bosom—a power that must be fed. Let us assume, then, that the soul is a vital force, selfacting, impressible, and hence, in the absence of great pursuit, will not be dormant, but will turn upon its owner and consume him

Let us turn now from this view of the evil of idleness to the direct value of a noble occupation. The first reflection that occurs is, that the mind itself needs it. It is patent that proposition. The human individual has given his heart to some calling, then his mind daily wakens up, and from each hour gathers new development. The lawyer who properly loves his profession, and who cherishes the true conception of that profession, does not enter it as a lawyer—he enters it as a mother, wearing indeed the garb of the court but able for a year or two only to swing the censer by the altar of Blackstone and Justinian. Many a young lawyer has sat down, as unwell that the Court take a recess, because his voice had begun to cleave to the roof of his mouth. But the great profession, and the great lauding heart devoted to the profession, have taken up the faltering gown, and have carried him right along for ten or twenty years, and then giving the toning one the compliments, the power, the pure, the happiness of an esteemed barrister the school house cannot educate. Its term is too short, and life is a part of life not sufficiently full of reflection. The school house does a vast work, but leaves the mind in Brunswick left the Cathedral of St. Peter—a thousand arches bending everywhere, but making no perfect temple for God or man. Angels came along and gathered up these arches, and made that sanctuary in which the music of worship has resounded for centuries Thus the great profession, be it law, or medicine, or science, or art, or religion, or philanthropy, comes to the thousand-house as an Angels to gather all the loose and in all its grandeur of middle life and old age. It is an Elijah's chariot ready to pass upward on bright clouds.

It is, hence, a fearful injury done the mind when one is bound up in a pursuit in a course short of being honorable. To be secretly and dishonorably extracting money out of an office or a profession, to have a business which one must conceal from his friends, is not only to run the risk of a punishment in eternity, but it is to secret of an awful punishment on the shores of time. The mind and soul lose their buoyancy. The night comes without eternal memory, the morning dawns without hope. There are blight and winds everywhere, gifted brains in this city, which are being wrecked, starved, murdered by the ingenuity of the parents to which they have been dragged through the late months or years. But though much remains to be said upon the subject, it is not the object of activity. Like the flesh of lightning, the soul must strike or somewhere, either among the clouds, causing the summer rain, or upon the cottage's summer death in the mutual. To be without a noble occupation is, therefore, not to be simply idle, or to be a non-producer, but it is to be hovering as a gravelling, corroding force, that, having no food to digest, will attack the stomach and digest the very source of life. Hence came the aphorism that "an idle brain is the devil's workshop." A force is acting that craves something to do, just as the drunkard craves its cup; and so value the work is on hand to meet the drawing of the mind's appetite, and, lo, the devil can rush into that brain and make it a shop of all acts and crafts to his malicious fancy. Pain, in seeking a soul's essential life, says, in its poetic manner "The bees pursuit no drones to dwell among them, but kill any bees that begin to grow idle." In his "Anatomy of Melancholy" Burton says: "Idleness is the bane of the body and mind, the step-mother to discipline, the chief author of mischief, one of the seven deadly sins, the cushion upon which the devil reposes." Thus the absence of an occupation does not leave us in peace, but in the very depth of emptiness, for it leaves us with a great unbridled power moving to and fro every day in the bosom—a power that must be fed. Let us assume, then, that the soul is a vital force, selfacting, impressible, and hence, In the absence of great pursuit, will not be dormant, but will turn upon its owner and consume him

Let us turn now from this view of the evil of idleness to the direct value of a noble occupation. The first reflection that occurs is, that the mind itself needs it. It is patent that proposition. The human individual has given his heart to some calling, then his mind daily wakens up, and from each hour gathers new development. The lawyer who properly loves his profession, and who cherishes the true conception of that profession, does not enter it as a lawyer—he enters it as a mother, wearing indeed the garb of the court but able for a year or two only of the soul. Youth for the most part receives it direct from Heaven. God blesses those who are not yet able to bless themselves. Hence, in all the early years happiness falls down upon most hearts like dew or sunlight upon the grass. The return of spring, the glories of summer, the exciting leaves and light of autumn, the snow-storm of winter, all alike bring joy to the young heart. No doubt you all remember the last fall time when the first flower of spring and the first white frost of autumn gave you the same happiness But as years come and go, Nature is less kind, and, like a cruel step-father, sends us away from home to work for any form of blessedness of which the heart may dream, dates of joy that stand always open in youth close up forever in middle life, and for the most part only one gate leading to spiritual peace.

It is indeed a grand gateway, perhaps more magnificent than the windows through which streamed the light of childhood's days—the gateway of a noble occupation. To go to and at night from the labors of a good calling, and to wake in the morning with a work, is to find the best happiness of all middle and old age. At times the heart may long for idleness, and in weary moments may picture a leisure full of delicious dreams, but these dreams are only delusions, coming not from the soul's wishing, but from its unrest. The history of middle life, the slander of enemies, will bring little grief to a spirit full of a noble occupation. Under the shadow of spreading oaks or elms require space around them; and if these columns were a little more spread—to use a prince's words—the architectural effect would be still grander. So in the Egyptian sculpture everything is coloss. In the granite lions and sphinxes there is always an aspect of power in repose which is very impressive, and strikes one with awe. But in the lighter work, such as fresco and bas reliefs, there is a total absence of delicacy and grace. Nothing can be more rude. They sometimes have a rude force of drawing, but beauty they have none. That was born in Greece. All the sculptures on all the temples of Egypt are not worth—except as historical monuments—the frieze of the Parthenon.—Dr. Field, in Evangelist.

SORREL'S TWO BONFIRES.

"This is Ruby, and this is my little Sorrel-top," said Farmer Field, raking his two little girls in his arms, after introducing them to his guests

"They don't look at all alike; I should never imagine them to be sisters," said Mrs. Patten, looking kindly at the two. And nobody would have thought it. Ruby was slender, with straight, dark hair, and eyes "like two black beans," her father said; while Sorrel-top was a little dumpling of a thing, with great blue eyes, and the curliest and reddest of curly red hair.

"It's the only bit of sorrel on all the prairie," continued Farmer Field, stroking the fiery curls and laughing.

Sorrel-top, whose real name was Flor ence, slipped quietly away from her father's arm, and, going to the doorstep, sat down and talked softly to herself.

"I wish I was pretty, like Ruby. Everybody always says, 'What a beautiful girl—such hair'—and mine's just like fuzzed-lamah all on fire. If I can't have anything but red hair, I won't have any, so there!

Leaning the dumpy shoulders, she went to her mother's work-basket; then, sobers in hand, went back to her favorite step. Presently there appeared a pile of hazel-brush all on fire, besides singularly short and forlorn-looking stubbs.

"What—why—what on creation are you up to?" and there stood brother Burt "Making a bonfire, eh? And—gracious, how you look! Why, Sorrel, your head is all humps and hollows, looks just like stubble—all but the color, you know."

The scissors fell from Sorrel's hands, and her head went down on her knees to a second, then came up with a jerk.

"Oh, Burt, I hate red hair—hate it, hate it!"

Burt was a great tease, but underneath the false-pleasing bluster beat a warm heart that just now was full of tender pity for poor little Sorrel.

So, throwing his matches beside her bright on the bonfire, though he didn't know it was laid and the remark alike looking head on his knee.

"Why, Sorrel, I didn't know you cared so. I wouldn't mind. Perhaps your hair is pretty when it's cut, and then it's always easy to braid. Now don't you cry, there's a good girl, and I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll make you a bonfire all by yourself, and you shall have the biggest one that ever was seen in Dakota. Come, now, forget all about your hair—I declare you haven't enough left to forget about!"

Burt stood manfully by his promise, and many a time shielded her from uncomfortable remarks

Later on that same day, Farmer Field had harnessed Major and Birdie to the velvet, had served an elaborate supper, and had taken his wife and two visitors for a ride across the prairie to Manitoke, the county seat. As he gathered the reins in his hands he looked back to the children, and thinks all this and much more, then with swift fast she found Ruby, and, snatching the book from her hands, cried: "Quick, the fire's right here! We must build another," and, catching a bundle of matches and some paper, she ran to the plowed ground. The first match went out. The next caught the paper, but the breeze blew too strongly, and away it went

"Ruby, for mercy's sake, bring some kindlings—anything—hurry!"

Now she felt the hot air on her face; how the flame roared, and the smoke was growing thick and sulting.

At last—it seemed an age to Florry, who had been pulling handfuls of grass and piling them—Ruby came with paper, straw and chips, and soon—but not a moment too soon—the grass inside the ring was burning, and the girls, running back to escape their own fire, knew that they were safe. Soon the whole prairie was on fire, and they all finally died in the waters of the creek, leaving a smoking, blackened plain, where, in the morning grasses had waved their pennons, and the little birds had gossiped over their supper of seeds.

"Time's fire fight fire," wasn't it?" said Burt, running his hand over Florry's ridgy head, as, late in the evening, they sat on their cozy step with the family. "Oh!"—remembering his promise—"take it all back, pigy I didn't say it, and I don't know but I like red hair—my hair—what there is of it—is red, you're a brave one, and I'll vote for you every time."

"Yes," said the father, "if your hair had been black or brown, you could have served out your hour no better. I never heard that the greatness of soul depended at all on the color of one's hair. Remember, little one, that God looks at the heart and not at the hair. You can be just as true, noble and Christian a girl and woman, as my little Sorrel, as you could be if you were beautiful as Venus or Juno."

And now Florence has learned to forget the brightness of her hair, in helping to make brightness in her home, and one could hardly find on all "Blooming Prairie" a happier girl than our once sorrowful Sorrel-top.—N. Y. Observer.

Stick to the Farm, Boys.

You surely don't mean that town and cities offer such splendid inducements, and promise such rich rewards? Yes, I mean just that. Stick to the farm!

These times, and they are stirring times too, times that call for all the tit and activity that can be crowded into every hour, times that call for all the gather to the towns. The result is, the towns and cities are crowded with young men seeking employment, looking for a situation, and still seeking and looking, month after month, till at length many of them conclude to go back to the old home and labor as farm life never offered them.

"But I want wealth."

Yes, so does everybody. But everybody does not get it. No, not one in a hundred of those who enter the mad race for riches, succeeds. Some lose health, some lose all, and the most are overwhelmed by seeing that man can't see, and yet do not succeed. And those who do, find that "he that love silver shall not be satisfied with silver." With wealth come cares, vexations, and annoyances innumerable, and, of itself, makes no man happy.

"But I want education."

That sounds better. That is a most laudable ambition. Strive for it. Get it. Make use of it. Go to your neighboring school till it can teach you no more. Then go higher if you can. If not, employ at home. Go through a course of study if you can possibly do so, and complish it. Study books, if you please, but study mathematics, history, science, and then go back to your farm, and till it all the better and more profitably for the knowledge you have acquired. Store your mind with information, cultivate your taste, enlarge your views of the world and its affairs, and then in the midst of your toil you will experience a placid joy of your intellectual nature, that will fill you with a large share of dreadgery. The moment toil becomes dreadgery, only when the worker is no higher than the work he is doing. Learn to love the farm, the farm life, and that will always be open before you in your open-air calling, a beauty and glory that never can be known by the occupants of dingy offices and dark stores.

Then marry some sweet, contented country maiden of similar taste. Build your house, and though it be of logs, it will be radiant with the truest, richest enjoyment of life. The best enjoyments life has for us are not those that flow in from outward circumstances, but those that well up from within. Stick to the farm.—Exchange.

As returns come in, more slowly perhaps than they may come in in the few successful cases among the many who have gone to the city, beautify your home, plant trees, set out shrubbery, buy, now and then, a piece of land as it comes, and so grow on slowly but surely into the serenity of a happy, cyclet life.

Then if, as years go on, a the competence dwarf on you, you may begin to devote yourself to these that need it, and retire yourself from the more laborious departments of your calling to become head, rather than hand, you will look back without regret, and forward without anxiety. And if, to all this, you add that fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom, you can go serenely down the vale of closing years, and leave behind you a name which, if it does not dazzle, may yet be a blessed name crowned with a blessed memory.—Indiana Farmer.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

BAKED PUDDING.—One quart sweet thick milk, twelve tablespoonfuls flour, a little salt, eight eggs. Beat the eggs separately, very light, and have the latter perfectly smooth. Bake quickly, and send to table immediately. Serve with butter sauce.

ENGLISH MUFFINS.—Make a sponge over night as for bread, using neither but yeast, flour, a little salt, and tepid water In the morning heat it up well and pour into muffin rings upon the griddle. The latter should be quite stiff enough "to drop (not run) from a spoon.

SPONGE CAKE.—Three eggs, one cup and a half sugar, half cup butter, half cup milk, half teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful cream tartar, two cups flour, whites of two eggs, half cup of sugar, beaten together. Bake in jelly-cake tins, frost each layer, and sprinkle with grated cocoanut. This is excellent.

TEA following is said to be a reliable remedy for chills: Take the juice of one lemon, put it in a cup of clear, strong coffee and drink it before eating. Break fast, for seven consecutive days. Take five grains of quinine twice daily, one hour after eating. The quinine should be gathered in the autumn, when the berries are fully matured, and the kernels are slowly filtered through soils free of all lime, and then in the midst of your toil you will experience a placid joy of your intellectual nature, that will fill you with a large share of dreadgery. The moment toil becomes dreadgery, only when the worker is no higher than the work he is doing. Learn to love the farm, the farm life, and that will always be open before you in your open-air calling, a beauty and glory that never can be known by the occupants of dingy offices and dark stores.

enough under the action of climatic influences to cultivate the soil with the necessary plant food, which they have unlocked from their chemical combination, and given to the soil in a proper physical condition. These changes are brought about more rapidly when certain mechanical changes of condition are wrought upon the soil.

Carbonic acid is one of the most active of the agents employed in bringing the insoluble inorganic matter in the soil into that physical condition in which it becomes available as plant food In order that this acid may be formed, it is essential that the earthiness on matter in the soil should be brought into direct contact with the atmosphere, from which they procure the oxygen necessary to convert them into carbonic acid. So long as stagnant water remains in the soil, or so long as the soil is in a condition of very compact condition, it is impossible for the carbon to be converted into acid.—Journal of Chemistry.

Pasturing Meadows.

If I tell you, says S. J. Wooley, in the Ohio Farmer, that pasturing your meadows will make them more productive, you may doubt it But such is the fact, in many cases. It is my experience that this is the only way that very many meadows can be brought to full profitableness. But it must be done in the proper manner and at the right time. Do not pasture your meadows in the spring and expect them to produce a full crop, neither expect your pasture off the after math meadows. Stock all wet meadows as soon as the frost has left the ground, and will keep quite as well, if not better, in cool shades, because the fat has more nitrogen than olefine, but in the case of thin teaspoonfuls, with faint coloring matter and much of the stearine, even fat pork is quite out of the question, European and Continental governments rejecting American pork for ships destined for the tropics and for expeditions bound to low latitudes. There is a remarkable variety of how food affects cellular tissue, in the fact that cane-fed American clear pork cannot be used for packing, since it causes the tissue to be cut into strings and then sown through or wound round cane, to flavor and enrich it; and for the same reason the custom of larding—a great resource for the culinary artist—has pretty much gone out of fashion in American cookery. While, then, an excellence by slop on the meadow, it is not the best way to fatten cattle. Cattle, like sheep, must thrust themselves into the already overcrowded professions, and become, in due time, addict to the same train in upon the counters of doctors standing about with empty hands in their pockets, waiting for business, while their families genteelly starve, but you find a living independence of the honor of hard work. Then if, as years go on, a the competence dwarf on you, you may begin to devote yourself to these that need it, and retire yourself from the more laborious departments of your calling to become head, rather than hand, you will look back without regret, and forward without anxiety. The Absorptive Power of Soil.

It is an important discovery of recent date, that soils have the power of separating not only gases from the air, but also, from their solutions, and of holding them with great tenacity after their absorption. Thus 100 grains of clay soil taken from the plastic clay formation of England, absorbed 1,950 grains of potash from a solution of muriate of potash containing one per cent. of the alkali. It is interesting to observe that the liquid was red, in this case, filtered through the soil, but the cold solution was merely left in contact with it for twelve hours.

It has been further shown that soils leave the ability to separate the alkaline bases from the acids with which they are combined. When the solutions are slowly filtered through soils free of lime inches deep, the liquids which passed through these acquired the usual and of good strength, which is not the case when purchased in the form of pills.

BOILED APPLE DUMPLING.—One pound of suet, chopped fine, one pound of fine spoonful of salt, chop the suet in a little flour to prevent its caking; chop very fine—as fine as flour. Roll out dough and mix thoroughly; then add cold water enough to make a paste; roll as thin as pie crust; put in dozen large apples quarter and core them, keeping each apple by itself, place the quarters together again and cut the paste in a square to cover the apple, tie each dumpling in a square cloth, leaving a very little room to swell. Boil an hour, putting them into boiling water; serve with hard sauce.

FLOATING ISLAND.—Separate the whites from the yolks of six eggs, and put the whites in a very large bowl; beat the yolks smooth and pour upon them one quart of sweetened milk well boiled, stirring to keep right until the consistency of cream, a little salt in the custard, in flavor, pare the yellow rind of a lemon as an apple is pared, and drop it into the boiling milk; let the custard become cold For the float beat the whites with one very large tablespoonful of currant jelly until the whip or egg-beater will stand erect Any other kind of jelly is too sweet and insipid. Beat as long as you can stand it, and then beat two minutes longer, and lay it upon the custard. If properly beaten it will pile very high.

COLORATION OF THE WIFE.—No man ever prospered in the world without the co-operation of his wife. Without her loving counsel and encouragement, her willing sacrifices, her economy and self-denial, her timely suggestions, her prudence in the management of household affairs, her sympathy in his success and failures, her encouragement in his despondency, her hopefulness in his darkest hours, her trust in his integrity, her faith in his ultimate success, her cheerfulness in his home, her welcome to his friends, her kindness to his children, her prayers for his safety, her tenderness in his sickness, her patience with his infirmities, her industry in her household duties, her watchfulness over his interests, her devotion to his memory, her confidence in his honesty, her pride in his character, her joy in his prosperity, her love for his person, her veneration for his manhood, her admiration for his talents, her appreciation of his motives, her respect for his opinions, her ambition for his success, her heroism in his misfortunes, her consolation in his afflictions, her counsel in his perplexities, her aid in his embarrassments, her forgiveness of his errors, her recognition of his efforts, her belief in his innocence when slandered, her assistance when needed, her forbearance when censured, her forgetfulness of his faults, her remembrance of his virtues, her appreciation of his worth, her resignation to his will, her submission to his chastisements, her obedience to his wishes, her devotion to his interests, her faithfulness to his trusts, her fidelity to his obligations, her regard for his honor, her love for his children, her veneration for An exchange says that Japan, one of the iron boats of the Atlantic Line, is receiving a wooden lacing over its entire iron hull. If this does not interfere with her speed for steering of both, all the other iron boats will be shortly treated. Not tough like wood, but thin iron skin is easily punctured by every snag or rock, for boats afloat, there is little hope of recovery.

The Manistee & Mackinaw R. R.—The contractors for the construction of this road have been notified to go on with the work, and they are to complete it by the 1st of January, 1877. It is not unlikely that the awarding of this contract will be followed soon by a renewal of work on the Grand Rapids & Indiana and the Jackson, Lansing & Saginaw roads, and their extension to Mackinaw.

Change Proposed.—From the Chicago Tribune we learn that serious trouble has been brewing for some time past between Rev. Father Dudley, and his parishioners, which has this week ended in an open rupture. When Father DuCoudrick found that he could no longer officiate there, he attempted to remove many of the things from the church to his house. Several of the parishioners noticed it soon to stop him, when he drew a revolver, which was taken from him. The excitement in Chicago over the matter is said to be intense.

No Patent Pain-Killer is made if it does not relieve pain, and by denied that the Best Chemical Substitute, made by De Land & Co., is all that its friends have claimed—but it is a note and a blessing to sufferers. This cannot be denied in face of the testimony of citizens and those best qualified to judge. It is much better than Soda and cheaper to use than Baking Powder.

Remember This.

Now is the time of the year for Pain-mona, Lung Fever, Bronchitis and a few rounds of pooh-pooh for Consumption and other Throat and Lung Diseases. Boschee's German Syrup has long held this neighborhood at the head of these troubles without a single failure to cure. If you have not used this medicine, we urge to your Druggist. Geo. W. Gregory, and ask him for its wonderful success among his customers. Two doses will relieve the worst case. If you have no faith in any medicine, just buy a sample Boschee's German Syrup for 10 cents and try it. Regular size Bottle 75 cents. Don't regard a cough to save 75 cents.

THERE hundred thousand dollars in silver dimes and quarters were received at the Treasury Department in Washington, from San Francisco, on the 6th.

THE Connecticut State election on the 3d resulted in the success of the Democratic ticket. The total vote of the State with only the town of Salem to hear from, which last year was 78 Republican to 73 Democratic, is 98,485, against 100,863 last year. Ingersoll (Dem.) for Governor has 51,071; Robinson (Rep.), 45,357; Atwater (Currency Reform), 1,986; Smith (Pro.), 1,871. Ingersoll's majority, 3,657; plurality, 5,515. The Senate stands 15 Democrats and 3 Republicans, and the House 159 Democrats to 85 Republicans and 3 Independents.

J. D. WARD, of Chicago, formerly Congressman from the Second Illinois District, and afterward United States District Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois, has been indicted by the United States Grand Jury for complicity in the whisky frauds of that city.

A FRAME boat, which was being drawn across the River Dee, at Aberdeen, Scotland, was capsized in mid-stream by the violence of the current on the 5th. The boat was crowded with passengers, and about thirty were drowned.

ON the 5th, a decree was promulgated in Paris, fixing May 1st, 1875, as the time of opening the Paris Universal Exposition.

NEARLY 12,000,000 postal cards were issued by the Postoffice Department during the month of March.

EX-SECRETARY BELKNAP has retained as his counsel in the impeachment trial, Messrs. Montgomery Blair, Jere. S. Black, Ben. Butler and Matt. H. Carpenter.

AN ORDER was issued, by the President, on the 5th, directing the re-location of the Army Headquarters at Washington, and also requiring that in future all orders issued by the War Department relative to military affairs be promulgated through the General of the Army.

THE returns from the Rhode Island State election, received on the morning of the 6th, give Lippitt (Rep.) for Governor, 8,212; Howard (Dem.), 6,227; Beach (Dem.), 3,472—Lippitt lacking about 1,400 of an election by the people. Atkinson (Rep.) for Secretary of State, is elected by about the 1,000 majority over Pierce (Dem.). The General Assembly will stand—Senate, twenty-seven Republicans and nine Democrats; House, sixty-three Republicans and nine Democrats, thus insuring the election of the Republican State ticket by that body.

THE announcement was made at Philadelphia on the 6th by Postmaster Farnum, that the postoffice of that city would be closed at dark, and all night work and business suspended in accordance with Secretary Bristow's recent instructions. Several business firms of the city threatened to apply to Congress for the appointment of a Postmaster, but the postoffice of that city would be opened after dark, although no business was transacted in accordance with the order except to sell stamps.

THE Springfield (Mass.) Republican of the 6th says that in setting up the affairs of Patrick Donahue, late assistant Postmaster of the Boston Tribune, facts of a most disgraceful character have come to light. It appears that during the last four years he has had thousands of dollars passed in his hands for safe-keeping by Irish Catholics, who regarded him as by their best friend. Such money he put in to his private business and lost.

THE Missouri State Democratic Convention will meet at Jefferson City, on the 31st of May, to elect delegates to the National Convention.

BISHOP HEV. JOHN JONES, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Virginia, died at Alexandria on the night of the 5th.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

On the 31st ult., the debate on the Mississippi resolutions of Mr. Morton was continued in the Senate, and a substitute offered by Mr. Christiancy was adopted—38 to 19. Several bills of minor importance were passed and the Senate adjourned to the 3d. Bills were passed in the House to define the duties of Commissioners of Immigration; authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to designate such persons as he may deem necessary to act as police at which the Collectors and Superintendents of Gaugers shall hold their offices; Senate bill making the 18th of April of the present year to the 12th of October, Columbus to allow the Government officials to witness the unveiling of the Discovery statue. The bill appropriating $100,000 for the defence of the Treasury Department, and for the issue of subsidiary silver coin was taken up, and was finally passed—to 109; in addition for the issue of coin of ten, twenty, twenty-five and fifty cents in amount sufficient to redeem and replace the present fractional currency, and makes silver coin of one dollar legal-tender in sums of fifty dollars, and lesser coins in sums of twenty-five dollars.

On the 1st the Senate was not in session; but the House the bill to amend the laws concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam vessels was debated at considerable length. A resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate charges of corrupt and base practices alleged to have been committed by Horace Bonsall, clerk of such committee, while an officer of the Internal Revenue Bureau in Texas.

On the 3d, Mr. Morton introduced a bill in the Senate, to amend the act to enforce the right of citizens to vote in the several States, the object of the amendment being to bring the Enforcement act within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. A bill was passed amendatory of the Bankrupt law, by providing that in voluntary assignment by a debtor of all the property, made in good faith for the benefit of creditors, and valued according to the law of the State where made, shall of itself, in the event of his being subsequently adjudicated a bankrupt, be a bar to the discharge of such debtor. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill relating to the President's salary was passed was lost—yeas, 37, nays, 39. Announcement was made that the House had adopted the Belknap impeachment articles. Several bills were introduced and referred in the House. The articles of impeachment against ex-Secretary Belknap were adopted, and Messrs. Lord, Knott, Scofield, Maynard, Jenks Lapham and Hoar were appointed as managers of the prosecution on the part of the House. Mr. Lord standing as Chairman of the Board of Managers. Bills were passed—authorizing the sale of the Panama reservation to Panama; amending the Pension law for the war of 1812.

On the 4th, in the Senate, Messrs. Boutwell, Carpenter, Wadleigh, Bayard and Whyte were appointed by the Chair as the special committee to inquire into the recent election in Mississippi. The impeachment managers on the part of the House appeared and presented the articles of impeachment against W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. A message was received from the President vetoing a bill for the relief of Mrs. B. F. Loan and E. H. Tandell, assignees of W. P. Chatham—the bill providing for the refunding to such assignees of money paid for two months' salary of a stationkeeper to a distillery in Kentucky in 1868-70. A bill was passed in the House, providing that no person shall be prosecuted, tried or punished for any offence, except against the Internal revenue, unless indicted within three years after such offence has been or may be committed. A report was made that the impeachment articles had been read in the Senate, and that that body would take action in the matter. When considering the Legislative appropriation bill an amendment was offered and finally rejected to omit the item for the President's salary—ayes, 37; nays, 39. On the 5th of March, 1877, until which school he had engaged his services during the continuance of his office.

On the 5th, bills were passed in the Senate, authorizing the sale of the Menominee reserve, in Wisconsin, under the direction of the Interior Department; House bill to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay judgments rendered by the Court of Alabama Claims; House bill authorizing the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation. The Senate organized as a Court of Impeachment, and an order was agreed to that a summons be issued to ex-Secretary Belknap, returnable on the 17th of April, in which time the Court adjourned. The bill fixing the rate of postage on third-class mail matter, and for other purposes, was taken up and debated. In the House, a resolution was adopted, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the House with an itemized account of the amount expended under the item of $40,000 appropriated for light and fuel for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876. A bill was passed regulating the winding up of National Banks. Announcement was made of the action of the House on the impeachment articles. A bill to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department was debated in Committee of the Whole, as was also, at the evening session, the Legislative Appropriation Bill.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

AT Averill, on the afternoon of the 31st ult., while a freight train on the Flint & Pere Marquette road was switching, Jimmie Conlin a boy about fourteen years of age, took hold of a box car while it was in motion, and was thrown between the car and the platform of the depot, and dragged fifty feet. The wheels passed over one leg terribly, completely splitting it. He died in two hours.

THE Alpena Arbus tells the following sad story. "A few days since we were informed of the great sufferings of a family named Patten, in Presque Isle County, and that about three weeks ago one of the family, a boy, had died from actual starvation. It appears from what we could learn that the man had kept the wolf from his door during the greater part of the winter by chopping wood and taking potatoes as payment, and that, after a time, his family becoming sick, he was obliged to remain at home and care for the suffering, and his little means of support ceased. He had repeatedly applied for assistance, but little was to be had, and at this writing one son has died and two girls were very low. The people have, however, taken the matter in hand, and we feel confident that their wants will now be supplied."

A TUSCOLA man, named George Smith, accidentally fell under a moving train at the Central Railroad depot, in Bay City, recently and was so badly injured that he died a few days after.

DR. REID has been restored to his position in the laboratory of the University.

1. Lake Superior lies in a synclinal trough, and its mode of formation, therefore, hardly admits of questions, though its sides are deeply scored with ice-marks, and its form and area may have been somewhat modified by this agent.

2. Lake Huron, Lake Michigan, Lake Erie and Lake Ontario are excavated basins, wrought out of once continuous sheets of sedimentary strata by a mechanical agent, and that ice or water, or both. That they have been filled with ice, and that this ice formed great moving glaciers, we may consider proved. The west end of Lake Erie may be said to be carved out of the continuous line-stone by ice action, as its bottom, and sides, and islands—horizontal, waved and even overhanging surfaces—are all furrowed by glacial grooves, which are parallel with the major axis of the lake.

All our great lakes are probably very ancient, as, since the close of the Devonian period, the area they occupy has never been submerged beneath the ocean, and their formation may have begun during the coal epoch.

This, at least, may be positively asserted in regard to the agency of ice in the excavation of the lake basins, that their bottoms and sides, wherever exposed to observation, if composed of rock-soluble materials, have undergone a chemical disintegration, proving that these basins were filled with moving glaciers in the last ice period, if never before, and that in part, at least, of the erosion by which they were formed is due to these glaciers.

Glove-Making in France.

FRANCE makes the finest gloves in the world, and they bring high prices in American markets. But the makers of the gloves have a hard life, and receive only meagre wages.

There are three departments in glove making in France—cutting out, sewing and finishing, that is to say, embroidering the back, making the button-holes and setting on the button. It is the work of men to cut out the gloves; but women place it into the hand which forms the measure, strike it with a stamp and prepare it for the cutter.

This is not difficult work, it is done by the piece, and they receive twenty-five to five dozen. The sewers are less favored. The price paid for a dozen pairs of ladies' gloves with one button is 1 fr. 50 c., out of this they had to pay fifty per cent to their employer, and forty per cent goes in silk, which they find, so that it only leaves about threepence halfpenny a pair.

It is asked how many pairs a good workwoman can complete in one day, the answer will be that, working twelve hours without interruption, she may manage to get through four pairs; but most of the hands only do two pairs and a half. They refuse from the attention they must pay to household work.

Glove-making requires the most perfect cleanliness. Not only are soiled gloves returned to the sewer, but also is obliged to wash her leather. Four pairs will be thus paid at the rate of elevenpence, from which a deduction must be made for lights of two and a half, leaving eightpence halfpenny.

These wages are still lower in Aveyron and Dauphine-Marne; but in the department of Isere, in some towns no less than 12,000 women, representing a value of 16,000,000 francs. The manufactory at Grenoble employs 1,200 cutters-out, making 5,000 dozen.

Those who work the back of the glove and finish it off are better paid; seven and sixpence is given for a dozen, but then the silk is not found. It requires six or seven hours to make a pair of embroidered gloves; supposing she does a pair and a half a day, she will not earn that sum in a week.

At this work a woman must sew regularly, and have neither children nor any household matters to distract her attention, as it requires great nicety and skill. In Paris this work is done at the workshop of the maker, where it can be better performed, and the highest class of embroidery obtain there about twelve shillings a day.

Too Much Value for the Size.

AFTER a most ridiculous and extravagant plea by a young lawyer in a trivial case, an older lawyer, who had a way of saying quaint things, remarked, in opening the opposing side of the case, that he had never before, and that in part, at least, of the erasion by which they were formed is due to these glaciers.

Senator Bayard and the Kuklux-Klans.

The Democratic party lies shown its reactionary proclivities chiefly in the House of Representatives during the last four months. By common consent Democratic Senators have sat with closed mouths during the discussions affecting the South and the interests of the late Confederacy. But the strain was too great to last. On Thursday, Mr. Bayard, unable to curb his fiery temper, launched out in defense of the Kuklux-Klans, assaulting the Government in its part in bringing Southern assassins to justice. So far, Mr. Bayard might properly have been regarded as indulging in political shop-talk for the benefit of his Presidential aspirations. But he did not stop at generalities. He declared that "under the Department of Justice fines had been wrongfully wrung from people down there (at the South), and he repeated they would be brought to Congress for payment." It was not believed at the time that the impudent assurance of Reg Hill and Tucker in defending the late Confederacy, and assaulting the Nation, would ever find a parallel on the floors of Congress. But Mr. Bayard goes a step further, and proposes that the people of the entire country shall be taxed to pay back to bullet-hole stabbers, robbers and assassins for fines collected from them as the penalty of their offenses against the laws! This preposterous would be monstrous coming from the lips of any but a rebel sympathizer. From Mr. Bayard, it merely shows that the Solid South is still encrusted, and that the Democratic party is the champion of ex-rebels, whose fashion and assassination as means proper to be used in partisan warfare. Mr. Bayard says that he thinks these claims to be brought before Congress for payment. We presume he knows that they will be presented to Congress for payment. But will it not set a thinking people for the American people—the representatives of bands of midnight assassins, shouting in their places in the Senate and House, and demanding that the funds for their murderous deeds be unstinted, paid back to them? Will Senator Bayard vote to pay those claims? We expect he will, and because he actively sympathizes with men who massacre negroes, or who may also delight to rob negroes of their right of suffrage, but because, it is dreamed a necessary to the success of the Democratic party to drive the negro from the political arena. The presentation of the claim of which Mr. Bayard gives notice to the Senate and the country is a logical sequence of Democratic principles and teaching. It is in perfect accord with the proposition to summon Jeff Davis in face of his traitorous expedient, and his speeches in defense of the late Confederacy. It is in perfect accord with the declaration of Hill and Tucker, that the war resulted nothing, but that Nation is a myth, that the Union is a rope of sand. The proposition to remit these fines is a proposition to justify the crimes for which they were imposed. Mr. Bayard proposes that Congress shall say to the Union armies: "We do not object to your slaying negroes away from the polls; we do not object to your banishing Northern men from your neighborhoods; we do not object to your killing those offenders who persist in voting and in remaining where they are not wanted. Dressed your bills, gentlemen, and we will audit and pay them." Mr. Bontwell and Mr. Morton showed the measure that Mr. Bayard knew nothing about the subject which he attempted to elucidate, but he plainly does know that the Kuklux Klans propose to make a raid upon the Treasury for the money "wrongfully wrung from them" by the Department of Justice. Will the members of the Senate, before the senate masked and under assumed names, and will Senator Bayard introduce and eulogize them by their true names, with an explanation as to why they and no wear masks and travel in dark nights under assumed names? We are of the opinion, Senator Bayard, that you will live to regret that you ever gave voice during the Kuklux Klans' pause to ask Congress to make respectable gentlemen of them by removing the brand of their infamy.—Inter Ocean.

The Difference.

The Nation has been plundered to the extent of millions of dollars by dishonest Democratic officials, many of there officials now holding high place in the estimation of their party friends. Ben Tweed, with his $20,000,000 stolen from the taxpayers of New York, was an apt scholar of modern Democracy. Intrusted by the county of a Democratic Sheriff, who had engaged in other days the prisoners by hospitality of this personnel official, the Boss disappeared between dark and daylight months ago, and nothing has been heard from him since. It is believed by many that he is still in New York city, the guest of his Democratic admirers. Had he been a Republican official he would have been breaking stone at hard-labor, and the democratic press would have been holding him up as a fair sample of Republican corruption. But as he was a Democratic leader his shortcomings are overlooked, and his crime scarcely mentioned by the Opposition press. Even the Sheriff holds his position, and how. Tilden nods consent. The great difference between Democracy and Republicanism is just this: the former shields its official rascals, the latter punishes them whenever found. There is not an instance on record where the Republican party shielded an official known to be dishonest.—Republic Magazine.

Lapland Life.

The Laps are divided into three distinct classes, viz., the Fjell Laps, the Forest Laps and the Fisher Laps, following a somewhat different manner of life, but agreeing in the use of the Lap dress and language and in their distaste for steady agricultural work. The Fisher Laps are not numerous in Swedish Lapland, but in Norway many of them are to be found earning a precarious livelihood on the shores of the northern fjords. Besides their boats and nets, they have little property, and are sometimes reduced to great extremity. Some of them possess a few goats, but more generally they depend almost entirely on the produce of their fishing in the lakes on whose shores they live in rough huts. The Forest Laps come next in order of importance. Their wealth consists principally in herds of reindeer, with which in summer they wander through the forests. Each family has the right of pasturage over a large tract of forest land, for which a small tax is paid to the government. Within the limits of this tract the Forest Lap moves with his reindeer from one rude hut to another in search of the grass and moss upon which the reindeer feed. In summer, grass and leaves form the food of the reindeer, and in the winter reindeer moss, a white lichen which grows on the ground in the forests. To reach this moss the reindeer scrape away the snow with their fore-feet. When the snow is deep, the passenger reindeer find it difficult to scrape away the snow, and are obliged to content themselves with the moss which has been left untouched by the larger animals in its holes they have scraped. Now and again a particularly trying winter comes, in which, from the snow having partially melted and then frozen, or from ice having formed on the ground, it is impossible for the reindeer to break through to the moss. This is one of the greatest calamities which can befall the Laps, who sometimes in such winters lose half their herds. The deer become wild and are not be restrained from wandering great distances in search of food. Many of them die of hunger, while others escape into a state of nature, and the survivors of the herd are injured by their long-continued privations. The only revenge of the Laps to mitigate this disaster is to cut down any trees which may be covered with moss, so that the reindeer may get at it; and it is with this object that the trees which the traveler finds cut down in remote parts of the forest, and left to rot, have been felled.

Girls, Beware!

FOLLOWING is a copy of a letter lithographed on stone, and printed so as to resemble ordinary hand-writing, which was received in this city a few days ago, from Philadelphia, signed Hayes, Arlington & Brodhe. The letter was addressed to a young woman, but as the carrier handed it to her father at the door, he opened it without looking at the address particularly, pulled out the letter, and read it to her without his daughter seeing it at all. He has forwarded it to the Eagle for publication, hoping that the false contents will be expressed, and people warned through the columns of the Eagle. The letter read as follows:

"Miss——: Our agent has been through your city this month, sent especially by us to gather the names of suitable young ladies to whom we propose to give employment for at least three months during the coming summer. We, of course, want comely and respectable looking people, and your name is on our agent's report. We have been selected by the Centennial Committee to engage for them at least 200 young ladies for the purpose of attending to the flower-stands, act as cashiers in the several refreshment departments, sell tickets for the grand elevator, and charge of wax-works, and pictures, guide-books, etc., attend to soda-water fountains, and many other light and respectable situations. Besides paying you well, say from eight to fifteen dollars per week, including your meals, you will have quite a fine opportunity of seeing the grand Centennial Exhibition every day. You will therefore see the necessity of replying early, as we want to engage everybody we want by the middle of April, and think have them thoroughly drilled and posted by the time the exhibition opens. We have decided to select young ladies from out of town, because the neighboring cities should be benefited as well as Philadelphia. Of course your parents will object to your leaving home. It would, therefore, be best for you to say nothing about this until you are here, and then to write to them. However, you can do as you please about that. We would like to have you here by the 12th of April. Answer immediately, which we will send you a letter of instructions how to come to Philadelphia, how to see us, and how to proceed. Your wages will be so in fall into wicked hands.—Reading (Pa.) Eagle.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

LONDON pays nearly one-third of the whole income tax of England.

THE sum of $121,000,000 has been spent in England since 1840 in building and repairing workers' cottages.

THE dollar at one per cent. annually in 365 years, the time elapsed since the first settlement in America, would amount to $136,000,000,000.

ONE dollar at three per cent. compounded annually for 100 years, the period of our National existence, would amount to about $19.80. One dollar at ten per cent. compounded similarly for a like time would amount to over $10,000.

SPEAKING of solid banks, what do you think of the Bank of England, which, in the last seven years, has had paid in notes to the number of 90,000,000, valued at 45,000,000,000, weighing over 112 tons, and which, if joined end to end, would reach 15,000 miles.

TUPE, FIELD AND PAIN publishes an account of an enormous hog, raised in the Putnam County, N. Y., which measured eight feet in length, seven feet girth around the body, stands three feet four inches high, and pulls the scales down at the enormous weight of 1,750 pounds.

PROF. C. V. RILEY, the State Entomologist of Missouri, and the President of St. Louis Academy of Sciences, in the course of a recent lecture in St. Louis on "Insects," said that the annual loss to farmers, caused by insects, averaged $100,000,000 a year; that the chinch bug alone, during 1874, caused a loss of $30,000,000 in the Western States, of which $10,000,000 were lost in Missouri. Prof. Riley estimated the losses by locusts (grasshoppers) during the last three years at $200,000,000.

A DISTASTE black and shining varnish for iron is made by adding to oil or turpentine strong sulphuric acid, drop by drop, stirring until a syrupy precipitate is formed and no more of it is produced on further addition of a drop of acid. The liquid is now repeatedly washed with water, until the water exhibits no more acid reaction. The precipitate is next brought upon a cloth filter, and after all the water has run off the syrupy mass is fit for use. This is painted over the iron with a brush, being previously diluted with oil of turpentine, in case it does not flow well. Immediately afterward, the paint is burnt in by a gentle heat, and, after cooling, the black surface is rubbed with a piece of woolen stuff dipped in linseed oil. This varnish is said to combine chemically with the metal, and does not wear or peel off.—Scientific American.

The total force in service was 43,000, and they "fit into" fifty-seven battles, skirmishes, and engagements of all sorts, and were formed up thirty-eight victories. Out of the 43,000, 2,500 survive to receive their pensions regularly. The youngest is now attaining the age of but seventy-four years, and have prospect of collecting their pensions for the next fifteen years. Of the survivors 339 aged eighty; 230 aged eighty-one; 170 aged eighty-five; 119 aged eighty-nine, and 3 over 100 years old. The Deliverance of Boston.

NEXT after the battle of Bunker Hill, the evacuation of Boston, which took place March 17, 1776, was the most conspicuous military event of the opening of the Revolution. Indeed, the flight of the British army was the first notable victory for the Revolutionists. Bunker Hill was almost an accidental episode. No flag was carried by the rebels, and the aid to be gained by their resistance was only vaguely understood by the brave men who stood shoulder to shoulder on that blood-stained hill. But the mustering of an army on Dorchester Heights was commanded by Washington, and what he had called the "Lion's Den," a bastion and and white stripes, with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, was hoisted over the works. General Livingston and the Bunker Hill were the opening signals of a long conflict. Bancroft says the forced evacuation of Boston "was the first decisive victory of the industrious shifting class over the once powerful representative of the medieval aristocracy."

When Washington began to complete the line which was to invest Boston, he had about nine thousand men. Lord Howe, commanding the British forces, was in town, with eight thousand men, and a powerful fleet, under Admiral Shuldham, was riding at anchor in the harbor. The British were strongly intrenched, well-provisioned and amply supplied with ammunition. The patriots were short of powder, ill paid and short of rations. Howe had delayed his proposed attack on New York for the reason that he had not transports enough to move his army. Through the winter he had remained shut up in Boston, the wretched inhabitants of which town, fretted and pinched though they were, remained defiant, hostile and resentful. The Tories of all the region around had gathered there for protection from the angry patriots; and it was not always possible for Howe to preserve the peace when these loyalists met their indignant fellow-countrymen in the streets of Boston.

The British Ministry had urged the more crushing and severe measures toward the rebels. New England, earliest in the rebellion, was to be cowardly punished. The resistance of the colonists was to be ended therr. Twenty thousand German mercenaries and recruits had been secured, and the ministers laughed at any suggestion of this being a hog war, with a disastrous ending for Great Britain. Harmonious counsels did not prevail among the American colonies, and many of the volunteers had left the little army. Dunmore had proclaimed martial law in Virginia, and had burned Norfolk, and Maryland was hesitating over propositions looking toward a declaration of independence. It was high time that the "British nest" in Boston, as Washington called it, should be broken up, if possible. In a single night, while a thunderstorm diverted the attention of the royal forces in the town, Washington threw up on Dorchester Heights a fortification on which Howe next day gazed with consternation. The ground was frozen, and the patriots had made skilful use in lace of bay, barrels filled with stones, and with as much of the stiff earth as could be dislodged with pick and shovel in the night. These heights commanded the town, and the British Admiral made haste to inform General Howe that his ships could not remain in the harbor if the rebels were to keep their new position. Powder being scarce, the Americans held their fire. A few days after, an attacking column, under Lord Percy, moved out of the town, crossing the bay to what is now South Boston, under the heights, in transports. The assault was deferred until next day, and that night a violent storm burst on the harbor, drove some of the fleet ashore, and so damaged the British flotilla that Percy and his men returned to Boston. Howe called a council of war, and immediate evacuation was ordered.

The embarkation began before dawn, March 17, and by night not a British soldier remained in the town. The fleet anchored in the lower bay, out of the reach of the cannon of the triumphant Americans, and the few hundred Tories who had taken passage for Halifax basked gloomily on the stones from which they were to be exiles. Washington's troops entered the town on the day after the evacuation, though the main body did not come in until March 20. The beloved Commander-in-Chief was every-where met with congratulations, thanks and praise by the delivered inhabitants. The news of the flight of the British flew fast and far. The rejoicings were the more hearty in that it confirmed many who were halting between two opinions, and it astonished and dismayed the ministers, who had utterly pated the speed, crushing of the rebellion in New England. From this time the sent of the war was transferred to other colonies. New England was spared the presence of the oppressor. The event is one worthy to be commemorated with much public rejoicing. It was the most signal victory in the war of the Revolution. It gave new hopes to the struggling colonists, and it inflicted a severe blow upon the military chieftain whose admirable strategy had accomplished this result.—N. Y. Times.

"Mexican Man."

NOT many people are aware that there is a people of that ability in Des Moines, owned and operated exclusively by some almond-eyed Orientals that speak the English language and wear the queer mensitis distance from Pekin. Such is the fact, and no small amount of sport the queer language there spoken furnishes to the boys in the laundry. Yesterday afternoon a coal miner, black in face and garment from the dust of the mines, tumbled into the building and curiously eyed the Orientals. He was uncommonly heavily laden with beer. It might be an exaggeration to say that the froth from the numerous glasses he had drank was visible in his ears, but he was extremely well filled. After scanning the Chinamen and fixtures a short time, he inquired:

"What kind of stone's this?"

"No stone-blunder," responded a disciple of Confucius.

"What doin' here?" continued the miner.

"Much washee; hisop washee, Mexican man," said the Chinaman.

"Wash; him, how washee?"

"One dollee one dozen, Mexican man."

"How much for one?" said the miner.

A little rapid fingering on the apparatus of blood-stained white, and instructions to the laundryman furnished an answer. "Ten cents," was the response.

The miner slowly and carefully explored his pocket and finally fished from its depth a paper dime which he handed to the washee. Gazing at the dime, the Hunker Hill were the opening signals of a long conflict. A Conversation With the Khedive.

I HAVE met the Khedive on two occasions during our sojourn in Cairo, and had a full half hour's conversation with him. He received us at his palace without much ceremony, coming down one flight of stairs to meet us half way, and then leading the way to his very plain but cosy reception room. For a Sovereign whose individual will is the supreme power over millions of people, the Khedive is very simple and democratic in his receptions, and one sees at once that his mind is more intent upon business than upon the pomp and show of royal power and court display. The Khedive is a man of full habit, though not over large, with quick, keen eye, a marked intellectual expression, and a well-developed auricular prominence. After the usual exchange of compliments he talked business with us, and little else. He said Egypt was trying to advance in civilization; that she had made some progress, as we had remarked, but a great deal had yet to be done to make the country what he wanted it to be. The people were to be educated; he remarked, just as children are taught from infancy, light has to be let in upon them gradually, else the mind is filled them instead of enabling them to see more clearly. But little by little they are getting used to the light, and find they can see a great deal better with it than without it. The Khedive conversed freely and at some length about the agricultural resources of the country, the crops produced, the lands reclaimed from the desert by irrigation, and the proper methods of working them and in Egypt so as to produce the most with the least expenditure of labor. He said Egypt was an agricultural country. They had few manufactures of their own: it was most to their advantage to buy manufactured articles abroad in exchange for their cotton and other agricultural products. The Khedive said he was desirous to secure the services of a competent practical farmer or land an agricultural chemist from America to test the soil of the country thoroughly in order to ascertain how it can be worked and cropped to the best advantage. He desired persons of experience and capacity for this specialty, but they must be men who have no interest connected with agricultural machinery or speculations of any sort from which they might hope to derive profit here. "I have," he said, "no end of people on hand who give me advice and offering to instruct others in agriculture, but the advice and offer to instruct have been supplemented with some specialties or other, and I have turned out that they wanted to sell us machines. Now, I want men who have no machines to sell, and who will tell me disinterestedly, so that we may find out with practical and scientific exactness the very best way of carrying on our agricultural industries. That accomplished, we can then buy machines and make other provisions for raising and securing crops as actual experiment shall have proved to be best adapted to the country. Thus we can successfully work out of the old system and into the better methods of cultivation in the pursuit of our industries." This is certainly sensible talk, and I must say that the Khedive impressed me as a man of decided ability, great business enterprise, and bent upon doing the best possible for the country over which he is ruling. He is a man of liberal views and wide culture. He spoke English well, and the French he can speak as fluently as his native Turkish. He is a man of large literary culture, has led several expeditions to that region, but in every instance failed to collect an entrance through the dreadly interwoven and impenetrable undergrowth of the center of the swamp, where the volcano is situated. While some of these attempts have been feeble and inefficient, others have been well organized and supplied, and led by men of experience and fearless of purpose. Judge White had an observatory which he could place in the tree tops to guide him in the right course. And yet this "undiscovered bourne" remains untrod. Even by the foot of a modern traveler; at least none have ever returned to report its mystery. One thing is certain, and that is that the Okefenokee swamp has been "done up" for the reading public, that another twelve months will see a new edition witnessing the successful unfolding of this mystery.—*Monticello (Fla.) The Slippers of the Declaration of Independence.

The following facts respecting the personality of the illustrious men who lumper their property, their lives and their lives by attaching their signatures to that instrument which established an National Independence will be read with interest as the Centennial anniversary of the day which witnessed the act draws near.

The thirteen States then comprising the American colonies were represented in the assemblage that passed the measure by fifty-one members. Thirty-seven of these were lawyers; four were physicians, five were clergymen, three were farmers, and the remainder were engaged in mercantile or other pursuits. Edward Roger Sherman, the shoemaker, and Benjamin Franklin, who boasted of being a printer, yet was a statesman and a philosopher. Benjamin Franklin was the oldest among the members and Edward Rutledge the youngest. Hooper was the most opulent and was the financier of the Adamsintration, negotiating extensive loans for the use of the Government upon his personal credit. He died in poverty, having been incarcerated for debt; a beautiful commentary on those laws that make no discrimination between the honest but unfortunate debtor and the convicted felon. Daniel Adams was the most wealthy, his unprofessional public services well known. The management of his pecuniary affairs made it necessary for him to keep a carriage, which was unusual. Josiah Bartlett was the first to vote for the measure, and first after President Hancock to affix his signature to the document. John Adams and Thomas Jefferson were subsequently Presidents. It is a remarkable fact that these two men, having been Presidents, succeeded one another in office that framed the Declaration of Independence, and the first recognized legacy of two grateful sons of the land of our country, died on the same day, the fourth of July, 1826, the fiftieth anniversary of the day upon which their parent presented to mankind the work to the welfare of their countrymen. Charles Carroll was the only member of the Congress who was a Catholic, and the reason of its being done in that instance is somewhat peculiar. The patriots that formed that convention knew full well that by their action on that day they hazarded their lives. When Carroll was signing some one near him remarked, "he will get off easily, as only Charles Carroll they will not know which to take." "Not so," replied he, and immediately added "of Carrollton." By this act all the memorable men with whom he acted on that eventful day pass away, and enjoyed the prosperity of his country until 1832, when he died in his ninety-fifth year.—Boston Journal.

Calves and Babies.

An acquaintance once complained to me that when she took her children into the country in pursuit of fresh air and wholesome food for their growing bodies, all the latter from the farmer's folks where she boarded, because the calves had to be taken away from the cows to prevent them sucking their mothers dry. Now, this is a pleasant bandage over the head to keep it warm. It will give immediate relief.—Rural New Yorker.

CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.—A correspondent of the Boston Journal writes that he has used the following remedy for diphtheria in a great many hard cases, and in not one has it failed to effect a cure. It is as follows: Procure some pitch-tar—not gas tar—just a little on a hot iron, inwert tunnel over the smoke, and let the patient inhale as much as he can without enough to be strangled. Repeat two or three times a day. During the intervals let the patient have small pieces of ice to keep as near the roof of the lungs as possible.

A WRITER in the Maine Farmer gives this recipe for coloring brown: Steep loaf, but not boil, one-half loaf brown sugar, until the strength is out. Then steep the goods one hour and stir; then put in and steep one-half hour and let boil one hour. Dissolve one ounce copperas in the liquor and bring it to a boil. If not dark enough, use more copperas. Various shades may be made by using less sugar, varying the bark and copperas. One part butternut and one part walnut bark answer to the above. The above is for four pounds of goods.

Dairy Schools in Denmark.

In connection with agricultural schools there have been established in Denmark schools for the education of girls in all that pertains to a dairy. There are six such schools in Denmark, all very prosperous. One of the principal of these is the "Thune Landbrugs Skole," or agricultural school of Thune.

Attached to the school are about a hundred acres of land with a dairy of twenty cows. The principal is a farm of 120 to 140 cows, of the Angler breed which was brought into notice at the French Universal Exposition in 1856. This institution is open for the year ends Nov. 15th to August, and for girls from Sept. 1st to Nov. 1st. The girls for two months' board and tuition pay the low charge of fifty-five Danish crowns, or about eighteen dollars.

A French writer who visited this institution found in attendance sixty-two beautiful and vigorous young girls. During the morning they were engaged in the dairy. There, in four sets of three each, received a hundred quarts of milk which with to make cheese. Others were engaged in the work of cooking. They went through all the processes connected with milking and the use of milk, and these were fully and clearly explained by the teachers.

In the afternoon, the girls are taught to reckon and keep accounts. They are also especially instructed in natural history, the physiology of the cow, the best kinds of nutriment, the function of the mammary glands, etc. They also spend a good deal of the time in singing.

These schools are of great advantage to the health and general knowledge and skill of the future wives and mothers of Denmark. In their general features they seem well worthy of imitation. In one particular their example is especially valuable. One of their chief aims is to inculcate in the girls a feeling of patriotism or love of country. They teach them that the permanent welfare of a land depends in great measure on its agriculture, and lead them to cherish a preference for a rural life rather than the greater luxury, but weaker health and more frequent vicissitudes of a crowded city. It would indeed be well if by some means a similar lesson could be impressed on the minds of the members of our own land, who are far too ready to seek a home in the cities, and thus to draw the young men thither also.—Tonic's Companion.

Broom Corn Culture.

We have a good many inquiries about the culture of broom corn, and having had a little experience with that crop, we give a brief answer, but more for the purpose of calling out the more extended experience of others than for the value of our own.

Broom corn requires rich soil, bottom land is the best, and it should have one free from grass as possible. The ground should be well plowed and made perfectly fine with the harrow, then marked out with shallow marks, it to be planted by hand, so as to not to get the seed too deep in the ground, but the best plan is to plant with a drill. Thirteen inches must be as close as five or six inches, to prevent the straw from becoming too heavy. Of course it cannot be drilled with much regularity, but must be cut out with the hoe to the right distance when small. It is like sorghum, grows slow while small and on most land it is positively necessary to lose the grass out, which gives a good opportunity for cutting out to the right distance. After this is done the cultivation is similar to that of corn. When the seed begins to fill the straw will bend over from the weight, and to prevent this the full force of hands must be put in to break the stalks over, say ten or twelve inches from where the straw grows out, or more properly the head. The weight of the seed will then by hanging down keep the straw straight.

Now comes the busy season, and the time when labor and care will add much to the value of the crop. The great straw being altogether the most valuable it is important that it be cut before it begins to turn red, and dried in the shade. To do this a shed is necessary, with shelves on which to lay it, say six inches deep, and enough hands be employed to cut the crop before any or much of it runs red. The seed is stripped by means of a machine made for the purpose, with two cylinders between which the corn is held in handful. The process is very rapid, only an instant being necessary to knock the seed off. The corn is baled before being sent to market. The price is very fascinating, running from $60 to $250 per ton. We have seen new sod broken and drilled in every second furrow, which under a half ton to the acre, without cultivation.—Journal of Agriculture.

Household Hints.

PLAIN FAMILY PASTE.—Two pounds of flour, half a pound of butter, half a pound of lard, mix as directed for puff paste. This makes very good paste for ordinary use.

SAGO PUDDING.—Two large spoonfuls of sago boiled in one quart of milk, the yolks of two eggs, a little nutmeg; when cold four eggs and a little salt. Bake about one hour and a half. Eat with sugar and cream.

SHORT CAKE.—Stir one pint porridge, one cup water, and one and a half cups native meal or wheatmeal (Graham flour). Make into a cake not more than half an inch thick and bake fifteen or twenty minutes in a hot oven.

GINGER SNAPS.—One pint of molasses, one cup of sugar, one cupful butter or lard, one tablespoonful of ginger and cloves each, one tablespoonful of cayenne pepper, flour enough to roll out very thin. Bake on flat tins.

BREAD RAISE.—Break the bread in small pieces, and moisten with milk or a little water; season with salt, pepper and a little nutmeg, adding a little dressage or parsley and a small piece of butter; mix and form into small cakes or flats, to cook with beef or chickens, or fry after meat in a skillet.

DRIED FRUITS.—One pint of milk boiled, one-fourth pound of butter or lard, one tablespoonful of sugar, six good potatoes mashed hot, flour to make a thick batter. Eat rise very light, then knead into soft dough, roll thin, put two together, let rise two hours and bake in hot oven.

RISING FOR BARGAINS.—There is scarcely any article to which children are subject, so hard to bear and difficult to cure, as the earache. But there is a remedy, never known to fail. Take a bit of cotton batting, put upon it a pinch of black pepper, either if up and tie it, dip in sweet oil, and insert into the ear. Put a flannel bandage over the head to keep it warm. It will give immediate relief.—Rural New Yorker.

CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.—A correspondent of the Boston Journal writes that he has used the following remedy for diphtheria in a great many hard cases, and in not one has it failed to effect a cure. It is as follows: Procure some pitch-tar—not gas tar—just a little on a hot iron, inwert tunnel over the smoke, and let the patient inhale as much as he can without enough to be strangled. Repeat two or three times a day. During the intervals let the patient have small pieces of ice to keep as near the roof of the lungs as possible.

A WRITER in the Maine Farmer gives this recipe for coloring brown: Steep loaf, but not boil, one-half loaf brown sugar, until the strength is out. Then steep the goods one hour and stir; then put in and steep one-half hour and let boil one hour. Dissolve one ounce copperas in the liquor and bring it to a boil. If not dark enough, use more copperas. Various shades may be made by using less sugar, varying the bark and copperas. One part butternut and one part walnut bark answer to the above. The above is for four pounds of goods.

Dairy Schools in Denmark.

In connection with agricultural schools there have been established in Denmark schools for the education of girls in all that pertains to a dairy. There are six such schools in Denmark, all very prosperous. One of the principal of these is the "Thune Landbrugs Skole," or agricultural school of Thune.

Attached to the school are about a hundred acres of land with a dairy of twenty cows. The principal is a farm of 120 to 140 cows, of the Angler breed which was brought into notice at the French Universal Exposition in 1856. This institution is open for the year ends Nov. 15th to August, and for girls from Sept. 1st to Nov. 1st. The girls for two months' board and tuition pay the low charge of fifty-five Danish crowns, or about eighteen dollars.

A French writer who visited this institution found in attendance sixty-two beautiful and vigorous young girls. During the morning they were engaged in the dairy. There, in four sets of three each, received a hundred quarts of milk which with to make cheese. Others were engaged in the work of cooking. They went through all the processes connected with milking and the use of milk, and these were fully and clearly explained by the teachers.

In the afternoon, the girls are taught to reckon and keep accounts. They are also especially instructed in natural history, the physiology of the cow, the best kinds of nutriment, the function of the mammary glands, etc. They also spend a good deal of the time in singing.

These schools are of great advantage to the health and general knowledge and skill of the future wives and mothers of Denmark. In their general features they seem well worthy of imitation. In one particular their example is especially valuable. One of their chief aims is to inculcate in the girls a feeling of patriotism or love of country. They teach them that the permanent welfare of a land depends in great measure on its agriculture, and lead them to cherish a preference for a rural life rather than the greater luxury, but weaker health and more frequent vicissitudes of a crowded city. It would indeed be well if by some means a similar lesson could be impressed on the minds of the members of our own land, who are far too ready to seek a home in the cities, and thus to draw the young men thither also.—Tonic's Companion.

Broom Corn Culture.

We have a good many inquiries about the culture of broom corn, and having had a little experience with that crop, we give a brief answer, but more for the purpose of calling out the more extended experience of others than for the value of our own.

Broom corn requires rich soil, bottom land is the best, and it should have one free from grass as possible. The ground should be well plowed and made perfectly fine with the harrow, then marked out with shallow marks, it to be planted by hand, so as to not to get the seed too deep in the ground, but the best plan is to plant with a drill. Thirteen inches must be as close as five or six inches, to prevent the straw from becoming too heavy. Of course it cannot be drilled with much regularity, but must be cut out with the hoe to the right distance when small. It is like sorghum, grows slow while small and on most land it is positively necessary to lose the grass out, which gives a good opportunity for cutting out to the right distance. After this is done the cultivation is similar to that of corn. When the seed begins to fill the straw will bend over from the weight, and to prevent this the full force of hands must be put in to break the stalks over, say ten or twelve inches from where the straw grows out, or more properly the head. The weight of the seed will then by hanging down keep the straw straight.

Now comes the busy season, and the time when labor and care will add much to the value of the crop. The great straw being altogether the most valuable it is important that it be cut before it begins to turn red, and dried in the shade. To do this a shed is necessary, with shelves on which to lay it, say six inches deep, and enough hands be employed to cut the crop before any or much of it runs red. The seed is stripped by means of a machine made for the purpose, with two cylinders between which the corn is held in handful. The process is very rapid, only an instant being necessary to knock the seed off. The corn is baled before being sent to market. The price is very fascinating, running from $60 to $250 per ton. We have seen new sod broken and drilled in every second furrow, which under a half ton to the acre, without cultivation.—Journal of Agriculture.

Dr. Schenck's Standard Remedies.

The standard remedies for all diseases of the Lungs are Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Sea Weed Tonic and Schenck's Mandrake Pills, which are taken in connection. The Pulmonic Syrup ripens and loosens the cough, and relieves the patient. Sea Weed Tonic acts on the liver, stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, causing all the secretions to flow freely. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup and Sea Weed Tonic are to be taken with the Pills. Full directions for using are given with each medicine. Dr. Schenck's Medicines are prepared and sold by Dr. J. H. Schenck & Son, Philadelphia, Pa., and are for sale by all druggists everywhere. Dr. Schenck is professionally at the principal office, No. 15 North Sixth street, Philadelphia, every Saturday, where all letters for advice must be addressed.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to issue silver coins of the coined States of the denomination of one, twenty-five and fifty cents, of standard value, in redemption of an equal amount of fractional currency, whether the same be now in the Treasury awaiting redemption, or whenever it may be presented for redemption; and the Secretary of the Treasury may, under the regulations of the Treasury Department, make provide for such redemption and issue, by distribution at the regular subtreasuries and depositories of the United States, until the whole amount of fractional currency outstanding shall be redeemed, and the fractional currency redeemed under the act hereby held to be a part of the sinking fund provided for by the existing law the interest to be computed thereon as in case of bonds redeemed under the acts relating to the sinking fund.

Killing Time.

IN there is any occupation under the sun from which every right-minded man and woman should pray to be delivered, it is that of "killing time."

We have seen people engaged in it, and we always pity them immensely.

Just think of it! To get up in the morning, with no definite employment for the day! To eat breakfast, and be as long as possible in doing it, so that dinner may come the sooner. To eat dinner with the same end in view, that supper may not be too far off.

Meanwhile, nothing to occupy the mind or the hands; the only idea present being the desire to pass the time, somehow.

Why, it is enough to make a well man sick, and to drive a rational man crazy.

The idea of killing time when the world is full of work, and not half hands enough to do it. Killing time when men and women aresuffering for the helpfulness they might render them, and innocent children are being sent to the almshouses for the very bread these lazy drones might earn for them.

Killing time, when there are forests to be leveled, cities to be built, deserts to be made to blossom like the rose, and whole nations of human beings yet to be Christianized, and taught that the first duty of a human man is to "love thy neighbor as thyself."

Fie, young man! for shame! take off your kid gloves, lay aside your dressing-gown and cigar, put on a pair of overalls, and go to work. Don't complain to us of weak stomachs, and trembling nerves, and "general debility." These ills are brought, their offspring, by idleness.

The man who follows a legitimate business never has any time to kill. He has not time enough. He has to calculate in order to make his allowance of time and the demand wholly labor makes upon it. And he will live longer and happier than the killer who works hard to get rid of the time allotted him, and the world will feel his loss ten times as much, for "it is better to wear out than to rust out."

Young women whose cheeks are pallid, and whose lips have lost their bloom, leave this wretched occupation of killing time, and go to work.

Hunt up the motherless and desolate children around you, and teach them to read and write, and make them some frocks and petticoats to keep the cold winds of winter from their shivering forms. Help the poor widow woman across the way with the garments of that flock of boys of hers; for who knows but somewhere among them there may be found the future President of these United States? Nothing more likely. And then, in such an event should come to pass, just think how proud you will be to say to your grandchildren on Inauguration Day, "Well, I made him a pair of trousers once."

Do anything honorable rather than kill time.

Time! the most priceless of all our treasures. Time, which is slipping away from us so fast that in a little while it will have passed forever, and eternity will have begun.

Think of England's unhappy Queen, who on her death bed cried in despair:

"My kingdom for a moment of time."—Kate Thorn, in N. Y. Weekly.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

On the 8th, at Grand Rapids, United States Judge Withey, of the Western District of Michigan, rendered a decision of great importance to photographers throughout the United States. Nearly four years ago Simon Wing brought a suit against Jos. H. Thompkins for infringement of his Southworth patent plate-holder for cameras, owned by him. Judge Withey decided that the letters patent reissued to Southworth Sept. 25, 1860, are void and of no effect; that Southworth is not the original and first discoverer of the plate-holder claimed by him. This decision is pronounced worth $500,000 to the photographers fraternity. Seven trials heretofore to test the validity of the patent resulted in favor of Southworth.

THE River and Harbor Appropriation bill, which passed the National House of Representatives on the 10th, contains the following items of interest to the people of Michigan: Grand Haven, $15,000; Eagle Harbor, $15,000; Marquette, $5,000; Frankfort, $5,000; Manistee, $15,000; Ludington, $30,000; Pentwater, $15,000; White River, $10,000; Muskegon, $15,000; Grand Haven, $15,000; Black Lake, $15,000; Saugatuck, $5,000; St. Joseph, $12,000; South Haven, $10,000; Chebeygan, $10,000; Au Sable River, $5,500; Saginaw River, $15,000; St. Mary's River and Canal, $200,000; Monroe, $7,000; Charlevoix, $5,000; Traverse Bay, $5,000; Michigan City Harbor, $15,000; Harbor of Refuge, Lake Huron, $100,000. In addition to the above, the Secretary of War is directed to cause an examination or survey to be made of the Manistee River, from its mouth to Sherman, Wexford County.

ROBERT MCGOWAN, Chairman of the new Board of Directors of the State Reform School, Lansing Democrat, has lately written a letter stating that the committee will commence to investigate on the 20th. The investigation will be taken in the form of a court of inquiry, and verbal testimony will be taken in open meeting. Douglas and Rose will both be summoned, and will appear with counsel and witnesses. President Angell will probably be the first witness summoned for Douglas.

DR. H. B. BAKER, of Lansing, is the writer of an article in the Medical Herald, in which a very interesting analysis is made from the statistics of the death rate of Michigan. In 1850 it was 114; in 1860 it was 99, and in 1870 it was 94 per cent. "Time," says the Doctor, "seem to be very languidly reducing the long and costly mistake of ignorance, whether the same be now in the Treasury awaiting redemption, or whenever it may be presented for redemption; and the Secretary of the Treasury may, under the regulations of the Treasury Department, make provide for such redemption and issue, by distribution at the regular subtreasuries and depositories of the United States, until the whole amount of fractional currency outstanding shall be redeemed, and the fractional currency redeemed under the act hereby held to be a part of the sinking fund provided for by the existing law the interest to be computed thereon as in case of bonds redeemed under the acts relating to the sinking fund.

Mau-Faling Tigers.

One of the most curious, and, at the same time, well-attested peculiarities of the tiger is that he does not naturally possess, but easily acquires a love of human flesh. At first tigers appear to have to that instinctive dread of man which is natural to all animals. The natives are aware of this habit, and carry on their usual avocations as grass-cutters, fruit-gatherers, herdsmen, etc., close to a thicket where a tiger is known to be lying. It is not merely fatalism, as might be supposed, that renders them thus apathetic, but the knowledge that so long as tigers can procure other food they will not lie in wait. Even when one of their cattle is struck down, they run up and often frighten the tiger from the body of his victim by shouting and beating sticks on the ground. "Sheep," or hendsmen, too, armed with what Aristotle calls the courage derived from experience, will conduct the timorous flock to the "kill" with fearless confidence. Take the cobra, they hold the tiger in superstitious reverence. In many parts, says Dr Fayrer, the natives will actually worship his name, save by a variety of periphrases or euphemisms, and will not kill him even when they have a fair opportunity, and so, for fear that his spirit will haunt them or do them mischief after death. But when the tiger has once tasted human flesh, the spell of man's supremacy is broken, and ever after that it is said, he prefers it to any other.—Fraser's Magazine.

—As regards the growth of rents, it is stated that a century ago the more important religious edifices owned by the number of churches) were ranked in the following order: Congregational, Baptist, Church of England, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Roman Methodist, Quaker, Reformed, and Roman Catholic. By the census of 1870 they stood: Methodist, Baptist, Roman Catholic, Presbyterian, Christian, Lutheran, Congregational and Protestant Episcopal. The growth of recent years especially has been unequaled. The growth of population. At the beginning of the Revolution there was less than 1,000 with a population of 9,000, following a church for every 1,500 souls. There are now more than 72,000, which, with a population of 38,000,000, would show a church for every 529. In other words, while the population has multiplied eleven fold, churches have multiplied only thirty-seven fold.—Popular Science Monthly.

Marshal Stalk—A Shakespearean Character.

ABRIEN OR MONTFORT says in his reminiscences of actors in Wilkes' Spirit: It was very generally known in the community, particularly among scholars and the knowledge that we long ago figure can procure other food they will not lie in wait. Even when one of their cattle is struck down, they run up and often frighten the tiger from the body of his victim by shouting and beating sticks on the ground. "Sheep," or hendsmen, too, armed with what Aristotle calls the courage derived from experience, will conduct the timorous flock to the "kill" with fearless confidence. Take the cobra, they hold the tiger in superstitious reverence. In many parts, says Dr Fayrer, the natives will actually worship his name, save by a variety of periphrases or euphemisms, and will not kill him even when they have a fair opportunity, and so, for fear that his spirit will haunt them or do them mischief after death. But when the tiger has once tasted human flesh, the spell of man's supremacy is broken, and ever after that it is said, he prefers it to any other.—Fraser's Magazine.

Death of A. T. Stewart.

In the death of Mr. A. T. Stewart, of New York, the world has lost the most distinguished merchant of recent times, Unlike most men who attain great wealth in this age and country, he earned the bulk of his fortune in mercantile pursuits. He was an Irishman by birth. He was born in a town called Lisburn, in the north of Ireland, in the year 1803. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and the earlier part of his career was devoted to school-teaching. He came to New York city in 1823, and, after remaining school for a short time, he started a retail dry-goods store in Broadway. His business increased steadily, until, ten years ago back, he owned and managed probably the largest dry-goods house in the world. He built his "down town" store, corner of Chambers street and Broadway, as early as 1848, and some years after erected another on the corner of Tenth and Broadway for the retail trade. His business has attained fabulous proportions, and he passed through three National panics—1837, 1857 and 1873—without being affected. He had the wisdom in each case to forecaste the crisis and prepare for it. In the panic of 1837 it is said that he sold out his entire stock some months previous to the crash, and subsequently bought back large parts of it at fifty cents on the dollar. He was a strict disciplinarian in the management of his business, and an implacable foe. He has been frequently charged with unfair practices in competition, but he himself attributed his success to a rigid observance of certain general principles, two of which were never to misrepresent any article of goods which he sold, and never to depart from the prices which he placed upon them.

Mr. Stewart however one and illiberal he may have been in a business way, was certainly magnificent in his charities. During the Irish famine in 1847 he chartered a ship, filled it with provisions, and sent the cargo as a gift to his countrymen. After the Chicago fire he sent $50,000 to the city for the benefit of the sufferers. A tribution, to be distributed among the poor sewing women who were among the sufferers. One of the best public institutions in this country was supplied by him in the erection of the large and handsome, and comfortable Woman's Home in New York, which provides lodging and board of good quality at the minimum price. It has been thought for many years that Mr Stewart, being childless (his wife survives him), would, at his death, leave the great bulk of his fortune to charitable purposes. It remains only for the opening of his will to determine this. His fortune has been variously estimated at from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000, but, like the late Mr. Astor, it will probably prove to have been exaggerated.

Mr. Stewart made but one conspicuous appearance in public life, and this was exceedingly brief. When Gen. Grant became President, he nominated Mr. Stewart for Secretary of the Treasury. But Senator Sumner found a forgotten statute prohibiting any one from serving as Secretary at the Treasury who is interested in importations, and Mr. Stewart's name was withdrawn. It was a misfortune that the country was deprived of his excellent judgment and shrewd business sagacity, little felt that he could not sacrifice his vast personal interests to serve the public. Of late years Mr. Stewart has been more social in his habits than formerly. He has had typhoid fever, and has built a magnificent residence on Fifth avenue, for the erection of which several years were taken and which he is said to have cost $1,000,000. He has also been a liberal purchaser of the fine arts, and his residence, as well as his country residence, is richly filled with choice and costly paintings.—Chicago Tribune.

The Terrible Destruction of the Danube Steamers.

FIFTEEN THOUSAND people, who have lost shelter and home, are being fed at public expense, 7,000 at Ruschuk alone. Many of them were owners of houses which have been leveled to the ground, or are now tobacco by their fall. Hundreds who have been living in easy circumstances are now reduced to extreme helplessness. The whole scene is being repeated along the immense stretch of water throughout Hungary. Only last week, when the news of the disaster was first received in the town of Mohacs, down the river, was half destroyed. The name is marked in the history of Hungary as the scene of misfortune. There, in the year 1526, the Magyars suffered a crushing defeat at the hands of the Turks, who consequently ruled over Hungary for nearly 150 years after. The walls, which stood the storms of 600 years, have been swept away by this flood in one short hour.

The whole extent of land under water at the present time is about 600 square miles, including 200,000 acres of tilled or arable land, which means ruined harvest hopes, calculated at 6,000,000 florins. As to the loss of damage accruing to the whole country, sixteen to twenty millions will hardly suffice to repair it. Not a single house has been visible for three weeks. The sky is lowering, and long-lasting rains are pouring down at short intervals, as if there were not enough of the liquid element already. In some townships, situate near the banks, the order to illuminate the houses at night is still obeyed, in order that all may be ready for any new emergency, and it is feared that the lykes may be caused by a three weeks' incessant motion of the waves rippling to the top.—Vienna Letter to the N. Y. Herald.

Marshal Stalk—A Shakespearean Character.

ABRIEN OR MONTFORT says in his reminiscences of actors in Wilkes' Spirit: It was very generally known in the community, particularly among scholars and the knowledge that the celebrated comedian, Wm. E. Burton, had one of the finest Shakespearean libraries in the country, and it was not an unusual thing for him to receive applications for the privilege to examine some particular work, apropos of some question of construction or debatable point of peculiar meanings of phrases, etc. These privileges were generally accorded, as they flattered the very pardonable pride of the owner of such valuable text-books. On one occasion a young gentleman was admitted with an introduction from a well-known legal practitioner at the New York bar, who desired to "read up" on certain points about which a wager had been made.

"The bearer," the latter went on to say, "is a student at Columbia College, and to him has been left the decision of the most question. You will permit him, I feel assured, to examine the authorities."

The comedian introduced the stranger to his library, and as he had "business stirred" left him among the precious volumes. Later in the day, when Burton returned to his house, he found the student still occupied in his researches. He judged, from the number of dismissed volumes, that he had been busily engaged in the search. At last, thinking he might be of service to the young gentleman, an offer of assistance was made and accepted.

"What particular passage do you seek?" inquired Burton.

"I am looking for one of the dramatis personæ," was the reply; "but thus far I have been unsuccessful. The assertion has been made that there is one character mentioned in some one of Shakespeare's plays that is never cast, indeed, that although it is always named, no one has ever been known to appear in."

"And what may the character be?"

"Marshal Stalk," replied the verdant youth.

The "Governor" at once perceived that a practical joke had been perpetrated upon the student, and so he came to his relief.

"You will find it in Hamlet," he said; "but you will perceive that, although he accompanies the Ghost to the wings, and even to the spot from which he is seen by other characters, he never comes upon the stage."

"Then," inquired the victim, "how do we know that he really exists?"

"Simply because those who see him record the fact. Here is the line:

'See where he comes with martial stalk.'

Of course, did they not see him, they could not mention him."

The argument was convincing, and the young man went away to settle the wager according to the light that had been given him. Burton used to relate the incident with a keen appreciation.

Mau-Faling Tigers.

One of the most curious, and, at the same time, well-attested peculiarities of the tiger is that he does not naturally possess, but easily acquires a love of human flesh. At first tigers appear to have to that instinctive dread of man which is natural to all animals. The natives are aware of this habit, and carry on their usual avocations as grass-cutters, fruit-gatherers, herdsmen, etc., close to a thicket where a tiger is known to be lying. It is not merely fatalism, as might be supposed, that renders them thus apathetic, but the knowledge that so long as tigers can procure other food they will not lie in wait. Even when one of their cattle is struck down, they run up and often frighten the tiger from the body of his victim by shouting and beating sticks on the ground. "Sheep," or hendsmen, too, armed with what Aristotle calls the courage derived from experience, will conduct the timorous flock to the "kill" with fearless confidence. Take the cobra, they hold the tiger in superstitious reverence. In many parts, says Dr Fayrer, the natives will actually worship his name, save by a variety of periphrases or euphemisms, and will not kill him even when they have a fair opportunity, and so, for fear that his spirit will haunt them or do them mischief after death. But when the tiger has once tasted human flesh, the spell of man's supremacy is broken, and ever after that it is said, he prefers it to any other.—Fraser's Magazine.

MAN AND WOMAN

WHAT MAKES A MAN?
A CHEERFUL soul, a loving mind;
Full of affection for his kind;
A spirit firm, erect and free—
That never barely bends a knee;
That will not bend a feather's weight
Of slavery's chaos for small or great;
That truly speaks from God within,
That very rarely makes a sin;
That sumps the fetters despite make,
And loves the truth for its own sake;
That worships God, and Him alone,
And bows no more than At His throne;
And trembles at no mortal soul
A soul that fears no one but God,
And thus can calmly all cares or loss
This is the sort that MAN IS A MAN.

WHAT MAKES A WOMAN?
Not costly dress, nor sparkly air;
Not jeweled hand, complexion fair;
Not graceful form, nor lofty tread;
Not curls, nor curls, nor splendid head:
Not pearly teeth, nor sparkling eyes,
Not voice like angel's from the skies;
Not breath as sweet as aylanthus;
Not gently grow, nor lustrous hair;
Not all the stores of Arabian's mart,
Nor yet the balmy sweets of art;
Not one, nor all of these combined,
Can make one woman true, refined.
The sort that makes the heart be right
Is what MAKES A WOMAN.

THE WRONG PICTURE.

"A PRETTY face—a very pretty face, indeed!"

I turned the little photograph upside down, held it off at arm's length to get a perspective view and scrutinized it closely with my eye-glasses.

Henry Wallis looked pleased; a man naturally likes his fiancé duly admired and appreciated.

"So this is the Bessie Armitage I have heard so much of, really, Wallis, she does credit to your taste. A blonde, I suppose?"

"Fair as a lily-leaf, with blue eyes and the smallest golden hair!"

"Well, I must say I prefer the brunette style, so far as my individual taste goes; but then fancies differ, you know."

It was all very well for Henry Wallis to go into ecstacies about his pallid, fair-haired little Bessie Armitage, he had never met the glance of Cecilia Vernon's magnificent black eyes, what did he know about the true type of feminine beauty?

"As you say, fancies differ," Wallis returned, lightly. "But I wish you would select a handsome frame for it when you go to town, Ashton, for I am afraid to run on the margin, or some such tasteful arrangement."

"I'll see to it," I said, depositing the picture in its envelope and returning it to my inside breast-pocket.

"You'll be very careful of it?"

"Careful! Of course I shall!"

I smiled a little loftily at Wallis' solicitude and we parted.

After all, Henry Wallis was better off than I was, for he was securely engaged to the dimpled, yellow-tressed little object of his affections, while I was yet free. It were, in outer darkness, uncertain whether my peerless Cecelia returned my ardent devotion or not. She seemingly inclined toward that unprincipled fellow, Fitzhugh Trefoil. A score of times I had resolved to settle the question; a score of times I had gone to the Vernons' house with the very formula of declaration on my lips, and as often had the words died away unuttered and unspoken.

If late had only gifted me with one thousandth part of Fitzhugh Trefoil's dash and audacity! I don't think anything short of the deluge could check that fellow's cool self-possession—an earthquake wouldn't, and I don't think the millennium could!

However, love inspires the feeblest heart with a sort of factitious courage, and I was a new man since Miss Vernon had smiled upon me. What was the use of so doubting, hesitating and trembling? Why not decide my fate at once? Henry Wallis's serene content exercised a stimulating influence upon me. I would fain have been as he was!

There is no sense in procrastinating matters any further," I said, half aloud, as I walked up and down the rather limited domains of my little law office. "I will go to-morrow, and—and then, even to the spot from which he is seen by other characters, he never comes upon the stage."

"Then," inquired the victim, "how do we know that he really exists?"

"Simply because those who see him record the fact. Here is the line:

I opened my writing-case and carefully took out a little carte de visite wrapped in tissue paper, and hesitatingly laid away with a pink silk perfume sachet that Minnie had made for me once. It was Cecilia's picture; she had allowed me to steal it away from her, with scarcely a remonstrance, a week before. Then was the time I ought to have proposed; but, like a thickhead, doubting mussel-sad as I was, I had let the golden tide of opportunity slip unimproved away from me.

I drew Bessie Armitage's variant, dull-like face from its envelope and compared the two with a thrill of triumph in my heart.

"Colorless water beside crimson, spark-ling champagne!" a pale violet in the shadow of a royal rose! pearls eclipsed by the fiery flash of diamonds!" I exclaimed. "Henry Wallis's taste may be very correct and classical, but give me my radiant brunette! Those bleached-out beauties don't correspond with my ideal of womanly loveliness!"

It was a lovely spring evening as I entered the wide graveled path that led up to the broad porch of Colonel Vernon's mansion. Squire Vernon and three ladies were smoking his inexpressibles.

"Were you all there, and have a smoke" he demanded, hospitably. "It's a real luxury to be able to take a whiff out of doors, after being shut up in the house all the time. Come in, Ashton, and prefer going in to see Cecily."

I took the cigar proffered me but refused to smoke it. What

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Alexander T. Stewart—Three Accidents Fortunate—Manufactures on Farms.

Passion of the Hour—The Great Events Ancient and Modern.

Amusements.

New York, April 19 1876

To the Editor of the Sentinel:—

Some ages, and that at an very distant date, the Genius of Architecture and the great men of America discovered a new field for their energies. After a while, however, it would seem that the Genius of Architecture had left the country, or at least lowered its standard, for nearly all the new buildings erected were of a very inferior character. Of late years great changes in style and taste will have passed over the minds of the architects, and will, when well applied, be highly appreciated. It is gratifying to observe that the old style of building is gradually becoming obsolete, and that the more modern and tasteful style is coming into use. Many of the new buildings erected during his forty years are models of commercial architecture, and have not only this even within their pages here, but many of the enlightenments in Europe have been continued under the old style and management of Mr. Stewart, as the surviving partner, Mr. Wm. Libbey, and this fact deserves a special notice from the press and representatives of the various departments connected with the establishment, whose many years of faithful service will be duly appreciated by the whole country. The change of the new York store from Mr. Stewart's time will be a great advantage to the public.

The Easter season is now over and a return to business. Previously, as is usual on occasions of this sort, there was a great rush of people from all parts of the country to this city, and the hotels were filled to overflowing. Many of the churches were also crowded to their utmost capacity, and the ministers were busily engaged in preaching to their congregations. The improvements in several of the Episcopal Churches were quite noticeable. With beautiful music, and other appropriate services, the Easter season was duly observed. Dr. Potter in the Cathedral, and Dr. Cheever, which is the oldest established church in the city—one of the earliest and oldest, but by no means the least—and several other prominent churches, were crowded with people. It is gratifying to observe that the old custom of wearing new clothes on this occasion is still kept up. Many of the ladies appeared in elegant costumes, only about twenty-five per cent. of the number of gentlemen were dressed in new clothes. Second avenue and Bowery, Fourth street, Third avenue, and Broadway were also crowded with people, and the streets were filled with carriages, only two squares above and below the spot around which the crowds were gathered—the best resting place of the eye should be the heart of the lover of which and life, and which is in nature so largely added to build up.

The number of articles and opinions upon the dead merchant and his wonderful career which have filled our papers, and the curiosity of their readers during the week, is legion. Every shade of judgment upon his character and work has been freely pronounced. Personally, in a few words, however, the result of his life seems to be that straightforwardness and unswerving truth are the strongest foundations upon which to build a great

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask has enjoyed for twenty years a reputation for the cure of the most dangerous and severe of inflammatory diseases ever known. At the age of seventy years, he succeeded in procuring by the use of it, as the result of his experiments, a combination of vegetable extracts the power of which to control and extract is unequaled in the history of medicine. His discovery, Trask's Magnetic Ointment, is the most powerful vegetable Antiseptic known to Medical Science in the form of an ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of diseases, assures it at once as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its merits.

It never fails, while these results are present life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease which caused the inflammation to become chronic.

Such is the power of this combination that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is reached out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it could so readily win internal as external diseases.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to those in near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with this disease when the Magnetic Ointment can be applied.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism the Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Hipjoints or Painful Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief in the worst attack of Chronic Rheumatism in twenty-four hours.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is unequaled.

A Positive cure for the Ague, Rheumatism, Lameness, Chronic sore Throat, Bronchitis, Tumor, Cough, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Sore in the Face or Bones, Burns, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Infantile Sore Eyes, &c. Never use it on the inside of the eyelid, nor in the ear if the drum is broken.

The Court Journal, of London, says that an American professor has devised a very remarkable apparatus. It consists of a small balloon, which will keep delicate and elastic skin stretched over it. A stream of gas passed through this drum will burn as usual till some one begins to sing near it, when the flame, under the influence of the vibrating skin, commences to skake to a measure which is varied indefinitely, according to the notes of the tune, so that, under certain conditions, it will be possible to photograph these movements of the flame, and this, of course, will be equivalent to photographing the tune.

The Sciences Among the Mound Builders.

The Mound-builders possessed some knowledge of astronomy, and at least had a practical knowledge of geometry and engineering. Their structures are always found in places which would now be selected by engineers for works designed to observe similar phenomena. It is a remarkable fact that the pyramidal mounds of the South have their faces to the cardinal points of the compass. In each case the square is found that the gates are always at the side looking toward the east. The pyramidal mound near Florence, Ala., although for years subjected to the disintegrating influence of the farmer's plow-share, is still seventy feet high, and covers as its base about one acre of ground. In Hinds county, Miss., there is a line of five mounds, extending from north to south. These are all of the pyramidal form. The largest of these is that in the center of the line. It is sixty-seven feet high, 20 while from north to south and 360 feet from east to west at the base. The others are smaller, the smallest being at the north and south. These mounds were surrounded by a wall of earth, covering thirty-six acres of land. The remains of the walls are still distinct. The lines are straight, north, south, east and west. The gateway in the enclosure was directly in front of the great mound, at the east side. These mounds were evidently, at one time, crowned by temples.

As another evidence that the Mound-builders had some knowledge of practical engineering, the highways, whose general direction may still be traced for many miles, may be cited. There are two somewhat remarkable groups of mounds in Tipton County, Tenn. These mounds are not of large size, except in one or two instances, but on some other accounts they possess an interest which does not often attach to those memorials of an extinct race. The first is situated some three or four miles to the southwest of Mason's depot, on a ridge dividing the waters of the East Beaver from those of the Middle Beaver creeks. There are about eleven of these mounds in the group, but they are of the small conical sort, and would not be likely to attract very much attention from the casual observer.

About ten miles a little south of west from the first-named group on the margin of a small stream, an affluent of the West Beaver, there is another group of mounds somewhat larger than those above described. Those mounds are pyramidal and some of them are of large size. They are evidently very ancient works. On one of these, which was about ten feet high above the surrounding level, about 200 feet long and 200 feet wider, Dr. Christopher Dawson formerly resided, having cleared the mound with a vast country residence.

Between these two groups there is a dense cypress brake situated in the marshy lands of the Middle Beaver Creek. This cypress swamp covers an area of about one and a half square miles. Extending across this swamp, in precisely an air line direction between the two groups of mounds, is a sort of levee, raised even yet two or three feet above the marshy land through which it passes. This ancient roadway is straight as a line, cutting the swamp directly through for the distance of more than a mile. From this fact there can be no doubt that the Mound-builders knew how to run lines and build roads.

Col Louis J. Dupree, editor of the Austin (Texas) Statesman, has given much attention to the subject of the archæology of the Mississippi Valley, and his observations contributed to Appleton's Journal and to the Southern Magazine are of no small value. Col Dupree has personally examined many of the remains of the Mound-builders found in the valley, and he has traced a well-defined line of defensive works, extending from the St. Francis to the White River, across the country in Arkansas. He finds evidence that if mighty struggle once took place in the valley of the Upper White River between the Mound-builders, who had been gradually pressed back by the hordes of barbarians from the North, and had multiplied their stand, met with an overwhelming overthrow and were destroyed or forced to flee. It was the Armageddon of the Mound-builders, and we are assured that a vast field of human bones yet exists in that region.

The character of the works examined by Dupree go to prove that the Mound-builders knew the art of defensive construction. Prof. Edward Fontaine in his work "How the World was Peopled," goes further, and expresses the opinion that the tayon systems of the Southern valley was once utilized for purposes of transportation; that the levees to prevent inundations built by the Mound builders may still be traced along the Mississippi and Yazoo Rivers south of Memphis, and finally that these people well understood the physics and hydraulics of the Mississippi River. These remains of their work prove that among the Mound-builders there were engineers of no small ability.—the Cape Eadies of their era.

We may thus infer from an examination of the situation of the mounds, whether erected for sacred purposes or as outlooks or as works of defense, showing admirable engineering skill, and from tracing the highways and levees which they connected, that the Mound-builders were not destitute of the higher faculties of constructive art. They may have had bridges and handsome boats, but time has obliterated every trace of these perishable things.—St. Louis Republican.

How a Stranger Fleeced a Hotel-Keeper.

WEDNESDAY afternoon a man entered one of the billiard rooms in this city and engaged in a game of billiards. He wore a long and flowing Ulster overcoat, while his pants were tucked inside of his boot-legs. He played about two hours, and when settling time arrived his bill amounted to two dollars and seventy-five cents. Cautiously approaching the proprietor he said that he didn't have a cent, but was willing to leave anything as security, promising to redeem it in the morning. In reply the proprietor told him to leave anything he wished, whereupon the stranger asked to be shown to a private room. His request was complied with, and in about a minute he came down-stairs carrying upon his arm a pair of pants nearly new and of very stylish make. He threw them on the counter, saying to the saw-keeper, saying, "Take 'em; they cost me eighteen dollars last week, but I'll redeem them in the morning."

"But what will you wear home?" said the proprietor. "I don't wish to strip you."

"That's all right," said the stranger. "My Ulster and top-boots easily make up for the lack of trousers, and I'll redeem the pledge in the morning." Thus the account was settled, and the stranger departed.

Then the stranger went to Gillman Brothers' Oyster Dream Hotel, and calling for a room retired. Yesterday morning he appeared at the hotel office and said to the clerk: "I am short of change, and am here and retired. This morning I awoke to find that during the night I had lost my pants, which contained all the money I had—about twenty-five dollars. It's an unfortunate transaction for me, and while I have no wish to appear hard on any, I do wish that it may not reflect upon the management of this hotel. Therefore I leave it with you to settle as you see fit, promising to abide by your decision without complaint."

E. H. Gillman was called, and after the case had been stated he referred to a room, when he became convinced that the stranger was without trousers, and thereupon search and inquiry failed to reveal their whereabouts, and soon a new pair of pants had been charged to Gillman Brothers and given to the stranger, who was also given twenty-five dollars in cash.

Yesterday afternoon the keeper of the billiard establishment visited the oyster dream and related as "a funny story" the episode of a man leaving a pair of pants worth eighteen dollars as security for a billiard bill of two dollars and seventy-five cents, adding "but he came back this morning with plenty of money and redeemed them."

E. H. Gillman, who last listened to the story, thought he saw some connection between his own experience and the story just related, and told the proprietor of the billiard room about "the stolen pants and twenty-five dollars," and they began to compare notes. The result was that they unanimously agreed that the man with an Ulster overcoat and top boots had, by shrewd deception, come out winner of a night's lodging, several games of billiards, a pair of twelve-dollar pants and twenty-five dollars in cash.—Detroit Free Press.

A Gilded Statue of Prince Alberi.

IT is a curious coincidence, says a London letter, that at the same time that the question of calling the Queen Empress is under discussion there should have been unfolded in Kensington Gardens a huge golden idol, sitting like a Hindoo god in a golden temple. This is another fancy of the Queen—a statue of Prince Albert, gilt all over, as the center-piece of the shimmering—it may rate it once glittered—memorial to the "Great and Good." It is impossible for almost any language to convey an adequate idea of the unpleasant and grotesque effect of this preposterous figure. When the sun shines on it, as it did to-day, no one can look at it without blinking. You see only a confused flash of glowing yellow light, and can distinguish neither the features nor even the attitude of the figure distinctly. The statue is in a sitting posture, one leg thrown out before the other; and, as it is perched very high, this produces rather an awkward effect from below. When the figure was seen in its original bronze this was not so perceptible, as there was a certain amount of rich shadow to disguise and mollify it; but, now it stands forth in a shimmer of gold, it certainly presents the appearance of some unnatural monster akin to the divinities which are worshiped in Eastern pagodas. Indeed, it might easily be mistaken for the golden calf, and take fair to be the laughing-stock of the town. Another serious disadvantage of the gilding is that, for the present, it makes the other decorations, which have not been gilt, look shabby, and tarnished through exposure to the weather, look still more shabby. In sticking on to-day to the guncrack tough and the gilded statue are the white marble sculptured which stand around and which are really noble works of art. If it a mercy that they have escaped being painted or gilt, though perhaps that may yet be their fate, in order to keep up the harmony of color.

French Vengeance upon Germany.

THE French give a new translation of the Bible's wife and say, "Vengeance is sweet, and I will have again my unfaithful." The Germans never could have wrought out such a plan of revenge in cold blood, and, if they had conceived it, so effective and so mortifying, as the French are wreaking on the German nation. The whole country is flooded with notices, pamphlets and addresses from the Ben Marche, and all other leading houses in Paris, containing samples and prices of goods, fashions, models, etc., that are so much better, cheaper and more tasteful than German work and goods, that every woman, even if she have but one dress a year, does not order it in Paris. The merchants here have their travelers, and send out to get orders, and most every effort to break up this ruinous competition, but even with the aid of air and exercise he runs down to Perrieres for a little shooting. Meanwhile Mme. de Rothschild is making the rounds of her hospitals, carrying relief and comfort to hundreds of those who suffer. These people have enormous fortunes, but they make good use of them, and live really noble lives. Envy is, therefore, out of the question. Few men would like to change his hours of labor with those of Baron Alphonse. And little Mlle. Bettina, now another Baronne de Rothschild, has made good use of her fortune and time also. From the time she was a little girl she has had her separate establishment in the Hotel Talleyrand, line Saint Florentin, her own agent, doctor, business man, governess, teachers, servants and stables, and had her own table, to which she invited her own relatives when she wished. She pursued her studies actively, and now years ago went before the Board of City Examiners and obtained a certificate entitling her to be appointed a teacher in the public schools, or to exercise the profession of governess. In case of loss of fortune, therefore—a remark which sounds absurd in her case—she is capable of earning her own living. She carries a dowry of twelve millions to her husband, and twelve millions to her sister's husband—two good-naturedly trying to teach her to skate—no one would have suspected her high standing. If any sentiments three makers wish to make themselves a name and a fortune, now is the time for them to come to Berlin.—Berlin Letter to Cincinnati Gazette.

A Rothschild Wedding.

I PENSIONED my last letter while the marriage of Mlle Bettina de Rothschild was going on in the Israelitish Temple, Rue de la Victoire, and went out in time to see the procession. It was a very grand affair, and the whole sculptured facade of the temple, and there they remained until the last gala carriage had left the street. As a general thing Hotel Paz, recesses alone are able to attract so general attention on the occasion of their marriages, but Mlle. Bettina may be called a Princess, being the heiress to the house of finance. No people in the world show such striking contrasts as those of Paris, in the midst of their republican orgies a few years ago, when all were engaged in scratching off the imperial eagles and in writing the word equality upon all the walls, they stopped to acclaim the "king of kings," the Shah-in-Shah, the most despotic monarch of the East, and seemingly like a royal pageant. Captivates them at once. But there is a reason for the popularity of the Rothschilds with the crowd. In the first place they are very large sums to the poor and support a number of charities. Secondly, it is known that the Baron is a very hard-working man. His wealth imposes a great deal of labor upon him. He rises at seven o'clock in the morning and goes directly to his bureau, working there steadily throughout the day, having his mid-day lunch brought to him. When in need of rest and exercise he runs down to Ferrieres for a little shooting. Meanwhile Mme. de Rothschild is making the rounds of her hospitals, carrying relief and comfort to hundreds of those who suffer. These people have enormous fortunes, but they make good use of them, and live really noble lives. Envy is, therefore, out of the question. The Democratic "Victory."

Under the inspiration of the Connecticut election, the clarion notes of the democratic chanticleer are being heard in town. The exceeding small and rarely occurring inducements to such indulgence of a cheerful spirit on the part of the Iowa Democratic hum-yard fowl doubtless gives zest to the present indulgence. The birds, however, hardly seem to be conscious of the extreme felicity of the occasion. Judging from the appearance presented by the rooster forced to the front column of the Des Moines Leader, they seem to be conscious, rather, that it is a crow and a run, and a quick run, too, with their family Cerberinely they wear a very "sassy" look. Well they may. Hitherto they have any more instinct, to say nothing of intellect, than attracts the editors by whom their appearance is painted in fine colors. Now they know well that their crowing over the Connecticut Democratic "victory" is worse than a farce—a shameless fraud. Connecticut has been a Democratic State, in its fundamental vote and government, ever since it was a State. The party up there opposed an investigation by the Senate alone, as it would have the appearance of trying mud on the party. It is peculiarly directly identified to the Democratic House, which has shown every trace the capacity of cool, reckless, machine-like efficiency in the straightened with a hand-hammer at the rate of thirty-one an hour, bored at the rate of fourteen an hour the first time, and again at the rate of three an hour, and so on to the end, the spike being sided at the twenty-third operation, the filling being done at the thirty-first, until the rough-looking cylinder with which the process began was turned into the nicely-finished rifle-barrel. Similarly the lay-out requires forty-five operations, besides twenty-five more for polishing, and other parts in proportion, and just the effect of each operation and the gradual process of the gun from birth is a very interesting and instructive manner. The barrel takes up two of these boards, which are about a yard square; the stock, which goes through ten operations, another, the bayonet another. The parts which are peculiar to the breech-loading system take in the afternoon. "The people"—the democracy that is so down on property and society—came as nearly as eight o'clock in order to get a good standing-room and the Temple, and there they remained until the last gala carriage had left the street. As a general thing Hotel Paz, cesses alone are able to attract so general attention on the occasion of their marriages, but Mlle. Democratic Investigations.

It is well understood that the numerous investigating committees appointed by the Democrats of Congress, are mere searchers after partisan capital for use in the coming Presidential campaign. Further than this they have no political purpose. Democrats are not fools enough to believe that it would result in vindicating, rather than condemning, the Republican party. As soon as this has been discovered, but they are only the exceptions, serving to more clearly demonstrate the capacity of the party and the general faithfulness of the men placed in responsible positions through its influence. This, upon the present time, is the result of the numerous investigations the history of recent elections demonstrate the fact that the people view it in that light.

The investigations have begun to understand that the Democrats in Congress, by squandering immense sums of money upon these investigations, are only doing what they have been most damaging to the Democracy, are not helping the party's cause in the coming struggle. In the consense of the journals are disposed to regard the Democratic course as a fraud, and denounce their policy in terms calculated to relieve the party. In a measure, this is true, and the ingenuity and stupidity and profligacy of the Confederate managers of the House of Representatives The New York Graphic, a journal which has been almost unanimously silent when it condemns the Congressional managers of that party.

Mr. Morton made a strong point in a recent speech on the Mississippi resolution in reply to Mr. Hoar. The latter opposed an investigation by the Senate alone, as it would have the appearance of trying mud on the party. He is sensitively directly to the Democratic House, which has shown every trace the capacity of cool, reckless machine-like efficiency in the straightened with a hand-hammer at the rate of thirty-one an hour, bored at the rate of fourteen an hour the first time, and again at the rate of three an hour, and so on to the end, the spike being sided at the twenty-third operation, the filling being done at the thirty-first, until the rough-looking cylinder with which the process began was turned into the nicely-finished rifle-barrel. Rifle Manufacture.

MASTER ARMORER ALLIS has been preparing an exhibit of the armory work for the Centennial, which contains in a little knowledge of humanity, of all the orderly and fitness of dress, in a degree less than any other nation under the sun, excepting the English, to be carried in the clothing—if any rule it once glittered—memorial to the "Great and Good." It is impossible for almost any language to convey an adequate idea of the unpleasant and grotesque effect of this preposterous figure. HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

RYE AND INDIAN MUSH.—Use two parts rather coarse corn meal and one part rye meal, stirring in the corn meal first, and cooking awhile if desired, then, adding the rye meal, stirring very carefully, cover close and cook slowly one hour or more.

CRANBERRY RELL.—Stew 1 quart of cranberries in sufficient water to keep them from burning. Make it very sweet, strain and cool. Make a paste, and when the cranberry is cold, spread it on the paste about an inch thick, roll it, fasten close in a flannel cloth, boil two hours, and serve with a sweet sauce.

CORSAGE CUSHIONS.—One of the most agreeable materials for cutushing whisdowns is coarse unbleached cotton. The irregularity of the thread and the roughness of the surface is to be compelled, but much the charm of a Russian crash, and its lint warms the light of cool, north windows almost to the glow of sunshine.—Harper's Bazar.

"How came you look whenever you say anything sanctimonious?" is his sweetheart. She burst into tears and said that was the first time she'd ever been called a sanctified girl.

We once asked the veteran punster, Catlin, why it was that a certain point on the Mississippi was called Malden's Bluff, and he promptly answered: "Because it's a 'virgin' on the river."—Brooklyn Argus.

DRY in the Black Hills gold region, when you buy a bowl of bean soup, you take off your coat, dive for a bean, and when you come up with it the proprietor has your coat raked away from you and says you only paid for soup.

THE editor of the DAYTON (W. T.) News, says, by the way, is a married man, and probably knows whereof he speaks. believes that a hornet's nest is a relief to the man who is quarterly opponent in Dayton the night of the women to vote.

THE most famous American cavalry General is now in charge of infantry. He has been heroical as a part, and swept down the valley of the shenandoah like a tempest, now sits quietly by a little cradle, murmuring a sweet lullaby. Particularly his fingers form a chain of rosary.

A LOCAL wit of Lafayette, Ark., undertook to feed Hr Westbrook one dusky night, and when nearly done take it off to brown the top.

FRUIT CAKES.—Those who have emptied their fruit cans of their first contents, and are fortunate enough to have given away, may now fill them with apple sauce for future use. Flavored with lemon, or black raspberries, and put up hot, like other fruit, this sauce is preferable to good dried apples. Some chop cabbage fine and pack tightly in glass cans, covering it with cold cider vinegar, seal them up, and then an excellent resource when the winter season comes on. It keeps well in this way.—Exchange.

TO COOK BEANS.—When beans are kept over a year or more they become rather difficult to cook. Soaking does not just accomplish it is to soak them over night in soft water, and in the morning put them to boil, putting a piece of soda, the size of a pea, to each quart of beans before they are put in the water. The water must not be turned off as soon as it is soft, but changed two or three times. Have a tea-kettle of boiling water ready to replace it when the other is poured off, as cold water hardens them again. After they begin to crack open they should be put in the oven, with a piece of pork previously freshened, and water enough to keep them from burning, and baked for several hours. Beans are a healthful and convenient dish and should often appear on a farmer's table, being as much better when cold than they are when just cooked.—Cor. Rural New Yorker.

Pea Culture.

PEAS require a cool, rich, deep soil to attain anything like a good, abundant crop. In preparing the soil, therefore, for the crop it is necessary to work it well and thoroughly pulverize to a good depth. Often the cause of mildew making such havoc on the vines is poor soil, which every soon dries and weakens their constitution, leaving them in a good condition for an attack from these parasites. In no kind of plant, when in a good, healthy, vigorous condition is mildew so liable to break out as a spot in a weak and unhealthy state. Where a good and continuous crop of vegetables is kept, a good place to grow peas is where the celery grew the previous year. In excavating the trench for celery it is best to grow the celery in single lines in the ridges; about five feet between the ridges, having a row of peas between. The year following, plant the peas where the celery grew and plant spinach between the rows of peas. Therefore, by the time the celery requires to be planted the peas are generally past; but, if not, the trenches for it can be made without injuring the rows of peas, they being planted the same distance as the celery. When planting the trenches for it to come right between the rows. Where considerable manure has been used for the celery —and a good manuring for it is necessary, to have anything like success—it is not exhausted, and entices the roots of the peas well down, where they are not apt to feel the effects of the warm weather. I have adopted this plan for peas for several years and find very good success attends the method. From the same piece of ground one can get three crops—peas, spinach and celery—in the same year. Some folks would put in Kinds five feet too far apart in the rows for peas—for some kinds, at any rate. I find that more peas can be picked from a piece of ground when they are planted from a piece the same size where they have been crowded in the rows.

Considerable differences of opinion exist about the depth peas should be put into the ground, some people setting down a certain depth for all, without thinking that there is a great difference of soils and that according to the looseness of the soil depends the depth they should be planted. In loose, dry soils peas should be covered about six inches, and, if very dry when planted, well trodden after the soil is put on them. In more retentive soils they do not require to be planted so deep, nor is it necessary to crowd them so much by treading. A little judgment and common sense are necessary with this, as well as with everything else connected with the garden.

PEAS should be planted as soon as the ground can be comfortably worked, and successions kept up until the warm weather sets in, as under the best care they cannot be profitably grown during the heat of summer.—Mansfield Million, in "Country Gentleman."

Bees.

IN purchasing honey bees see that you do not obtain them within two miles of your dwelling, as they might fly back to their old home and be lost. It is just as well to get them in the old style of box hive, and they can be transferred to such movable comb hives as you conclude to use, after they have swarmed once, waiting fifteen to twenty days to give time for the young bees to leave their cells, or as many as possible, then transfer them. The easiest way to do this is first to get such a few pieces of comb to the bars of the new hive on one side, say on three of them, with nailed battens, using a small brush, or a rag tied to the end of a stick will do. The operation must be quickly performed in the middle of a warm day. Next you should apply a thick coat of wax to the extreme lower edges of the other bars, which should be made of the same depth as the comb, so that the bee cage may be less waste. This shape, if the lower part be waxed a half an inch on each side, will cause the bees to built their combs evenly upon them. Now you are ready to transfer your bees. In the forenoon of a warm day turn your old box hive bottom up, and set upon it an empty hive of the same size and shape, or any such one as is to suit. Turn the cloth around where the two hives come next, so as to exclude the light; then rap smartly upon the lower hive with a stick in each hand for several minutes, by which time the queen and most of the bees will have gone up into the box sleeve, then turn the two hives upon a stone, either where the old hive stood before driving out the bees, or directly in front of its former place. If the weather be warm and inclines, then by a sudden jar dislodge all the bees in front of it, and they will all enter it. It is also those that were in the fields, and the transfer is complete. Now set the new hive upon the stand of the old one, and take some of the combs in the old hive containing honey, which place in the new hive on the bottom board, raised so as to allow bees to pass under them, then fill with empty combs. You will find that about two pounds of honey will suffice to be put on them. In more retentive soils they do not require to be planted so deep, nor is it necessary to crowd them so much by treading. Manuring to Destroy Weeds.

"SUITABLE food for crops," says an English journal, "enables them to conquer the weeds." In regard to clover, it was found that when the land was well manured, the weeds formed fifty-seven per cent. of the entire yield, but that the application of gypsum reduced the proportion of weeds to two per cent. Nitrogenous manures lived very slight effect, and mineral manures, applied alone, were almost not from this, however, consider gypsum as an antidote to weeds in general. Such a manure is a manure for every and gives it a power to struggle successfully with the weeds, and crowd them out."

IT is commonly observed that the first effect of large quantities of barnyard manure is to make the weeds grow more vigorously. This is partly because the manure is usually filled with weed seeds, and also because the increase in fertility benefits weeds as well as crops which, with power soil, would have remained dormant. The light, warm and rich soil will sprout and weeds to a greater depth than that which is heavy, cold and poor.

On the other hand, where grain crops are grown, multitudes of these weeds are smothered and destroyed by the stronger growth of the grains. Almost all annual weeds start from seeds as tiny and as feeble as turnip or cabbage, and a light drag passed over drilled oats or barley, just as the grain is well up, will hardly disturb a single spear, but will bury and up-root the feeble weeds by millions. In this way a field may be kept clean, and, where spring grain is to be followed by wheat, the habit of stirring the soluble soil in this manner is much lessened.—Rural New Yorker.

Dr. Schenck's Standard Remedies.

The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs and throat are Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Seaweed Tonic and Schenck's Mandrake Pills. Full directions for using are given with each medicine. A special visit is not necessary. Consultation free. Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owns his medicines are the result of his practice, and that he has no secret nostrum. Each of the above medicines is prepared from one of the principal ingredients contained in his practice, and the general directions for using are given in pamphlets, which can be had of any druggist. Dr. Schenck is professionally at his office, No. 15 North Sixth street, Philadelphia, every Saturday, where he will be pleased to meet his friends and patients, who can consult him either personally or by letter, free of charge. The Doctor is also the proprietor of Dr. Schenck's Sea-Weed Tonic, which is a specific for dyspepsia, and is highly recommended by those who have used it. Dr. Schenck's Mandrake Pills are said to act specifically on the liver, and to be a great help in all diseases where a cathartic is required. Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup is said to be the great remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, and consumption, which, when taken in time, will cure these diseases, and is said to be the best expectorant known to the medical profession. Dr. Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is said to be a great blood purifier, and is highly recommended for dyspepsia. Dr. Schenck's Mandrake Pills are said to be a great liver stimulant, and are highly recommended for biliousness. Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are said to be prepared only by Dr. J. H. Schenck & Son, Philadelphia, Pa., and are sold by druggists everywhere.

THE AMERICAN INSURANCE CO. OF CHICAGO.

The American of Chicago has been much abandoned of late. Let us say why. Has it ever failed to meet its obligations?—Is pay every loss promptly against it? Nay, that is not claimed by its different enemies. Are its officers or stockholders unreliable business men, or of indefinite moral standard? The mention of the names disproves that. None can be dared to bring any such. such as these, H. S. Hibbard, Hon. J. M. Bailey, How. W. H. Bradley, E. Z. Taliey, L. L. Mann, Wm. H. Livingston, Nicholas Kenney, M. A. Bayne, H. B. Carter, Jr., A. L.

...Band Instructor.—The Charlevoix County Band, of Hudson's last issue, consisting of violins, clarionets, Drums, and other instruments will be added during the summer. A reorganization will soon be effected and Dr. Hazelton a correct player of Horn, B.S., is expected to join the band and as teacher the members of the band have purchased new music and we hope that when the people of the village are called upon to support another they will respond with a liberal hand. The members of the band are highly interested to perfect themselves, and we only hope to soon have a musical organization that we shall be proud of.

Ulterior Views.—The real right and wrong in land matters have caused endless questions to D. B. Bullard & Co.'s Weekly Courant, which paper, however, fights for the rights of our country entering settlers wisely differ upon many points, we concur in a verdict that the Best Universal Saleratus is the only reliable article in use for light and sweet bread.

The Pension bill was vetoed by Hayes to reduce the pensions from $72,000,000. He could not do otherwise, and again my constituents, among signed the bill to make it $72,000,000.

Pleasantries.—The recent Indian of the Black Hills and pushing the railroad through, reports that this part recently visited with an expedition, the Record Chief at Bismarck. Red Indian is the son of the old Greek [illegible]. We learn he was engaged in the bloody battles of the wild rice, of the French and English war, more than 100 years ago. Pedro here claims to be over 125 years old and cited through his interpreter [illegible] to his wife. His recollection is not favorable to his claims.

Think.—A report that Robert Toombs, of Georgia has come to town at last. To enable him to argue a case before the Supreme Court, the other day, it is said he actually took the oath to support the Constitution of the United States before Chief Justice Waite. If this is true, Robert has lost his hold upon the affections of the terrified Georgians, who greatly admired his persistent refusal to "take any thing" as the result of the late war. It matter the native Georgian may be compelled to swear "by Ben Hill," and not "by Bob Toombs," as they were wont to do prior to his recent visit to Washington.

Methodist Camp Ground.—The Trustees of the above mentioned ground to Grand Rapids lately, and concluded their business with the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad Company. A camp meeting is to be held on the Petoskey grounds, commencing on Tuesday, August 2, and to continue for a week or more. The grounds, consisting of 300 acres, are to be prepared at an early day for occupancy. A city will be laid out, with regular streets and avenues, with a central spot for religious services. Cottage buildings can be commenced as early as July, if not sooner, where families can go and spend the hot season in rest and quiet. The [illegible] will be constructed to the grounds, and a depot building, in which to store baggage and accommodate the [illegible], will be erected immediately. The property is to be within the reach of all. The corporation is certainly good, as will be seen by the following statement: The lots, 50 by 100 feet, will be leased for a term of fifteen years, at an annual rental, according to location, of from $2 to $10 per year. All who lease lots are required to join the association and pay a life membership fee of $10. $20 will secure one of the best lots and pay the membership fee of one family. Persons who may not wish to join the association, but still wish to occupy a lot, can have the privilege of doing so on ground devoted to that purpose. A committee will mark off the places for canvas tents, where the fee, if any, will be very slight for the year. While money will be needed to develop the grounds, yet all are invited, and every effort will be made to bring this resort within the reach of those of most limited means.

Remember This.

Now is the time of the year for Pneumonia, Lung Fever, Coughs, Colds, and fatal results of predisposition to Consumption and other Throat and Lung Disease. Boschee's German Syrup has been used in this neighborhood for the past two or three years without a single failure to cure. If you have not used this great remedy yourself, go to your Druggist, Geo. W. Crosier, and ask him for its wonderful success among his customers. Two doses will relieve the worst case. If you have no faith in any medicine, just buy a Sample Bottle of Boschee's German Syrup for 10 cents and try it. Regular size Bottle 75 cents. Don't neglect a cough to save 75 cents.

Kinds of crops in some parts of the latter State peaches and early apples has suffered, but not seriously. Michigan reported wheat as a plentiful yield all round. In Indiana the winter and spring had proved unfavorable for winter wheat and peaches, but apples and small fruits appeared to be thriving. Reports from Ohio were to the effect that wheat was badly damaged, except in the southern counties, where it was, and a reduced yield of all kinds of fruit was expected

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

On the 15th, the Senate was not in session. In the House, the Senate bill to provide for the administration of oaths in Congressional cases was passed. Immediately debate ensued on a resolution reported from the Judiciary Committee relative to the writ of habeas corpus demand by Kilbourne, the recusant witness, the resolution directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to make careful return to the writ, setting out the cause of the detention of the witness, and to still keep him in custody, and not produce him before Judge at court, unless further order of the House. No vote was had on the resolution.

On the 17th, the House Deficiency Appropriation bill was reported in the Senate, with amendments. Various petitions and memorials were presented. A bill was passed providing that the Senate resolved itself into a High Court of Impeachment, and the House was notified of such action. Ex-Secretary Belknap soon after entered, accompanied by his counsel. After the Impeachment Managers and Members of the House had appeared, and the formal opening of the Court, Mr. Carpenter, for the defense, read and had filed a plea denying the jurisdiction of the Senate to try Mr. Belknap, as he is not an officer of the Government at the time the articles of impeachment were drawn and presented in the Senate, and that he then was and has since been a private citizen. The court then adjourned to the 19th, to give the Managers time to prepare an answer to the plea. In the House, a lengthy debate was had on the Kilbourne case, and a resolution was finally adopted declaring the Sergeant-at-Arms to make return to the writ of habeas corpus, and to produce Kilbourne, but on the night, a substitute was adopted that in the Senate proceedings in the impeachment case, the House should appear in the Senate only by Messengers.

On the 18th, bills were passed in the Senate authorizing the sale of the Government Record and other public documents to members of Congress at cost, and to pay certain additional Indian Deficiency Appropriations, with amendments. In the House a conference report was made to the Alabama contested election case of Humphrey vs. Haralson, declaring the sitting member, Haralson, entitled to the seat, and the report was agreed to. In the Florida election case a majority report was made that Wells, the sitting member, was not, and that Finley, the contestant, was entitled to the seat.

On the 19th, in the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, the Managers of the House presented the answer adopted by the House to the pleas of the defense, the answer being to the effect that at the time of the commission of the acts charged in the Indictment as an officer of the United States, and was such an officer until after the House had considered and investigated the said charges against him and since preparing for his impeachment, a fact known to him and which he concealed. No other act was then agreed to, and the respondent for the time being was relieved of the House by the 20th, the Managers their rejoinder by the 20th, and that the hearing in the 21st. No further proceedings transpired. The memorial asking the bill relating to the salary of the President was laid before the Senate. The House bill to define the tax on fermented and malt liquors was passed, throughout the committee of the whole. The bill relating to the transfer of the Custom-house and appraisers' stores in the city of New York was passed. In the House, the Senate bill to refund the tax on distilled spirits was passed, and the bill was passed on the calendar. In the House, the resolution for remitting the duty on incense-bearing boats of the United States to the United States bearing four per cent. and under, and having forty vessels, etc., to provide for the cottage of Continental coins. The report of the Florida contested election case was agreed to, and J. C. Finley was sworn in. The Secretary of State reported that he had received from the will of Auburn corpse in the Baron Stiegmeyer claim, and that the claim had ordered $150 paid upon the receipt of the Marshal.

On the 20th, the Senate unanimously passed a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to allow Mr. Maude Sherman Ehrlich to transfer, free from duty, the wedding presents from the Khedive of Egypt. Amendments were offered to the bill to amend the laws relating to the legislature of silver coin. Adjourned to the 22d. Bills were introduced in the House to open up the public ground on the north side of public lands in each State, to limit the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to remit fines, penalties of the will of Auburn corpse. The Senate amendments to the Legislative and Diplomatic Appropriation bill were concurred in. Some of the Senate amendments to the Indefinite Appropriation bill were rejected, and others were concurred in. A resolution was adopted setting the evidence taken in a newspaper report affecting the official conduct of Secretary Fenton in regard to the Pension Office, at a forfeiture in the case of the back Mary Mc Gill, sol. and A. Milwaukee, and for a violation of the Custom laws, and instructing the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department to investigate the matter. The bill to amend the Indian Bureau in the War Department was taken up and amended.

Children's Fashions.

Little girls, from six to ten, wear hats which turn down all round and up in the back. The flowers and bows are placed on top. Brown, white, and white and navy blue combined, are the favorite colors. Other girls wear turbines; and especially the Derby, these have scarfs of soft twilled silk in Madras colors, or plain colors, and a stiff wing on one side. Satior hats are of dark blue straw, the brim turned up all round. For little boys' better dress suits are more like those worn by Portuguese sailors; the magic words "Invincible," or "Serapis," in gilt letters on the front, give them a thoroughly nautical appearance. Scotch caps, in blue straw, are also very novel; these have the thistle in oxidized silver in front.

Children's dresses are still worn kilted; in plaids the blouse shape is a special favorite for boys and girls of five or six. It is sometimes made double-breasted, and is confined at the waist by a scarf of soft woolen material, the color of some stripe in the plaid. Often the edges of the blouse are cut in squares and bound. The very plainest methods for making up children's garments prevail, simplicity in trimming being seen in all the samples sent from Europe. The favorite style of dress garment for little girls is of gray cashmere, with gabrielle frock, sacque back and gilt plaitings set in at the waist; a broad sash starting from the side seams ties loosely at the back, just above the gilt plaitings. Variations of this, in which colored and black or silk gathered double tucks and pockets on the front of the skirt, are found in all the children's dress departments. Little boys wear English walking jackets over their kilted suits; these have gathered sacques at the back and pointed fronts

Haugman's Day. Matters at Philadelphia.

A Hint to Visitors.

From our Regular Correspondent.

NEW YORK Apr. 27, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL:

The "genteel Vicar" popularly supposed himself to be across the most active and energetic people of creation, and to a very limited to give selfish type, he can contemplate as much work in any given time as in the same time, as anybody can. It was, therefore, both a surprise and a revelation to the Egyptian ideas to see the celebrated and talented Don Pedro come in upon us like a cyclone, and peremptorily call for the Centennial Fair, and in two days to the most thorough manner, swing in four acres of land portions, respecting all its parts, buildings and parks, its palaces, Empire's Police and Fire Departments, etc., etc., from A to Izzard, probably learning some of its general condition and characteristics in that short time than many of its citizens ever find out, and then, briefly packing his carpet-bag for a little run through the Centennial, just to while away the time before the opening of the Centennial. People who, for weeks were looking forward to his coming as the occasion for a sort of holiday pageant, and the chance to glean upon a prolonged parade of royalty are now looking around to see who here who have had a real flesh and blood among us or only a small white veil.

Again has the majesty of the law received awful vindication in the hanging of John Dunn, to whose sophistries and hours of calmness couple I made reference in my last. The efforts made in his behalf by his counsel and sympathizers were Herculean, and were continued up to the last moment. Among those who besieged Governor Tilden for his interference, was Tennessee Claffin, who failing in her attempt to move him, predicted his early downfall in case the execution was allowed to take place, and cited the case of ex-Governor Fox, whom she had threatened in a similar manner and for a similar cause. Even this dismal warning failed of the desired result, and on the morning of the 21st the murderer was launched into eternity from the inner court of the Tombs.

This afternoon, Apr. 28th.

Father and Sweet fly the hammer, the saw, and the plane, as the ships slip to and the 10th of May opens up with more than a score fourteen days time to be independence of the Centennial ground, but as well have the plans and exhibitions been made in most cases, and there is little fear but the opening will find the Exposition generally prepared for the Fourth. The time for set was April 19th, but events show the wisdom of the change. The buildings, which by few days since were open to the public are only vastly small, and the main avenue is already crowded, while the whole grounds present from the outside. The exhibits are pretty well in place, though there still remains a good deal to be done in that time, especially in finishing point for the crests of artistic and colorful effect when lead have provided for that class. So great has the excitement been in the art department that the Big Memorial Hall, designed for its reception, has overflowed into several temporary structures erected around it for the purpose.

Already the city is beginning to fill up, mostly, however, with foreigners so far, but it will not be long before numbers will commence pouring in from the neighboring States, anxious to secure quarters in time, and be ready to enjoy the opening. Some nine-tenths of all the cost for the first day attending and preparing to entertain this grand Mecca of American patriots will be total among the Philadelphia, and of those a very large proportion are massed to travel with its designers and agents. Many. All these persons need and

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medicinal properties and power of vegetables, roots and herbs, and the result of his labors is now recorded. At the age of forty years, he succeeded in preserving the juices, or essential principles of herbs, a combination of Vegetable extracts with power of which, in removing disease, is unequaled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combining of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in cases of diseases, cramps it at once, the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for the most rigid and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, when thus rend is applied, its to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and assist the circulation of the blood over the wound a corresponding result of disease, which cannot exist in disease from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone and muscle, nerve and ligament, is aroused out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it come as really with internal as external disease.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to persons who were given that the most powerful Medicines in use had failed to produce any effect, as has frequently been the case in inflammation of the Bowels.

No person ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this ointment is the most prompt remedy ever discovered. For Dysentery or Bloody Flux, it is unequaled.

For Dysentery or Painful Sores in the throat, it will effect quicker relief to the worst cases of Sore Throat in three minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.

A Feeling of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Unwonted Sore Throat, Dysentery, Pleurisy, Croup, Chilblains, Felons, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, Sore Nipples, Scald Head, Earache, the Face or Bowels, Piles, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Burns, &c., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

STATISTICAL genius exhibits that the finance in the United States cost $2,500,000.00. About 9,000,000,000 lumber saints are annually torn out in getting over these cussing, and not a statistic on the subject.—Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard.

SUPPOSING the life of a railroad sleeper is seven years, the 85,000 miles of track consume annually 11,000,000 sleepers, or thirty years' growth on 40,000 acres of the best natural woodlands. Or, if the sleepers are raised artificially, some 700,000 acres would be required, planted with trees best adapted for the purpose, regularly cropped and scientifically managed to supply the demands already consistent. At least 150,000 miles of fencing are required to enclose the railroads of the country, which could not have cost on an average less than $500 per mile. One half of this would have represented the cost of the wood employed, or $37,500,000, which it must take annually lumber to the value of at least $10,000,000 or $15,000,000. Hinges to repair.—Mr. Mantell's Address.

INTERESTING details from the coal mining regions of Pennsylvania says the Pittsburg Post, are to be had nearly every day. Despite the fact that the Allegheny river has been declined, coal is coming down in large quantities, and the consequences attendant on such a habit.

Aside from the fact that the money squandered upon the wood might be much more profitably invested in bank or some pernicious, a reader cannot afford to indulge in any practice that makes him more partially

THE Egyptian army are retiring from Abyssinia.

THE Hungarian Ministers tendered their resignations, on the 24th, in consequence of the disinclination of the Austrian Government to consent to the establishment of a Hungarian National Bank. The Emperor declined to accept their resignations, and directed a re-conference with the Hungarian liberals.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 24th says Gen. Belknap had lately written a letter to a friend, in which he denied in positive terms that he had made any confession concerning the charges against him relative to the Fort Sill post-trader's affair. On the 24th, his counsel filed with Secretary Gorham a rejoinder to the replication of the House in the impeachment matter. It denied that he was Secretary of War until after a committee of the House had investigated his official conduct, and declared that he resigned that he might have the investigation by the Senate, and also averred that Mr. Clymer had said to him on the 1st of March that, unless he (Belknap) should resign his position as Secretary of War before noon the next day, he (Clymer) would move his impeachment in the House; that he yielded to the intimation thus given that he might avoid a protracted trial before the Senate. This alleged agreement on the part of the Chairman of the Investigating Committee, it is urged, should estop the House from prosecuting the impeachment.

THE Iowa Independent State Convention has been called to meet at Des Moines on the 10th of May to select delegates to the Greenback National Convention at Indianapolis. The Wisconsin Greenback Convention is to be held at Madison on the same day and for a like purpose.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

TEN Eastern gentlemen, to whom was awarded the contract for building the Marquette & Mackinaw Railroad, have decided not to accept the same, and the work will have to be let again.

SETH TURNER, a wealthy farmer of Grand Rapids township, aged seventy, cut his throat four times with a razor on the morning of the 24th, inflicting presumably fatal wounds.

PROF. S. H. DIRDSALL, of the Michigan University, has lately brought suit for libel against the Ann Arbor Courier, in which he claims damages of $50,000 for the injury done his good name by the Courier in its comments upon Prof. Dexter laboratory debates.

FOR some time past numerous petty robberies have been perpetrated in Saginaw City, and the efforts of the police, until recently, have been unavailing to detect the perpetrators. A few days ago a man named Fred Schulte, who lives just opposite the City on what is known as the Sawdust Road, while in a state of drunkenness, disclosed enough to lead to the suspicion that he was one of a gang implicated in the robberies. Schulte was arrested, and in a number of houses in the neighborhood, a large quantity of stolen articles were found.

RECORDS from the central and southern portions of the Lower Peninsula indicate an abundant wheat harvest.

AT East Saginaw, recently, two young men, named Johnson and Goodwin, while at work, were arrested in the act of passing counterfeit money. In their possession was found $1,000 in bills and $250 in silver. The counterfeit money was of the First National Bank currency. The counterfeits were of the same denomination of the Merchants' Bank of New Bedford Mass., and, consequently, the bank officers are dangerous

Horrors of the Slave Trade.

THE Briton, ten-screw corvette, Capt. Lindesay Brine, which arrived home last week to be paid off, was commissioned on the 28th November, 1874, at Sheerness. A correspondent gives an account of her operations on the east coast of Africa in the suppression of the slave trade. Some of the boats with their crews were detached at various times from thirty to eighty days. Twelve slave-dhows were captured by her boats, and nearly 200 slaves rescued from bondage. One dhow contained 122 men, women and children of all ages, the majority being children from four to fourteen years of age. They were in a terrible condition, their bones protruding, and being in a most famished and disgusting state, rendering it incredible to think they were human beings enclosed with reason at all. Two hundred and sixty-two days before the boats captured her, but seventy-eight had died from starvation on the passage, and lain thrown overboard like dogs. The Briton's men gave the Captain of the dhow four dozen with a good rope's end for striking a slave after they had captured the vessel, and on sighting the ship he jumped overboard and was drowned, probably fearing a repetition of this wholesome lesson. The Briton's log contains many painful incidents connected with the capture. The Admiralty, in the case of Admiral Erskine, who died on the China station, has decided that the Admiral's widow is entitled to a pension of £1,000 a year, and the Admiralty has also decided that the widow of Admiral Sir Leopold Heath, who died on the Australian station, is entitled to a pension of £1,000 a year.

The President's Message Vetoing the Salary Bill.

THE following is the message of President Grant vetoing "An act fixing the salary of the President of the United States."

To the Senate of the United States:

Herewith I return Senate bill No 1275, entitled "An act fixing the salary of the President of the United States," without my approval. I am constrained to this course from a sense of duty to my successors in office, to myself, and to what is due to the dignity of the position of Chief Magistrate of a nation of more than forty millions of people.

When the salary of the President of the United States was fixed by the Constitution at $25,000 per annum, we were a nation of but three millions of people, poor from a long and expensive war, without commerce or manufactures, with but few wants, and those simply supplied. The salary must then have been deemed small for the responsibilities and dignity of the position, but justly so from the impoverished condition of the Treasury and the simplicity it was desired to cultivate in the Republic. The salary of Congressmen under the Constitution was fixed at $6 per day for the time actually in session, an average of about 120 days for each session, or $720 per year, or less than one-thirtieth of the salary of the President. Congressmen have legislated upon their salaries from time to time until finally it reached $5,000 per annum, or one-fifth that of the President before the salary of the latter was increased.

No one having a knowledge of the cost of living at the National Capital, will consider that the present salary of Congressmen is too high, unless it be the intention to make the office one entirely of honor, a high salary should be abolished—a proposition originated in our republican times and held and held until the engine could be stopped, without. I do not believe the citizens of this Republic desire their public servants to serve them without a fair compensation for their services. The sum of $50,000 does not defray the expenses of the Executive for one year, or less than in my experience. It is over one-fifth in value what it was when fixed by the Constitution in supplying demands and wants.

Having no personal interest in this matter, I have felt myself free to return this bill to the house to which it originated with my objections, believing that in doing so I meet the wishes and judgment of the great majority of those who indirectly pay all the taxes and other expenses of the Government.

U. S. GRANT.

Executive Mansion, April 18, 1876.

Mischievous Charity.

SOME years ago I picked up several children in Chicago, and thought I would clothe them and feed them; and I took special interest in those boys to see what I could make of them. I don't think it was thirty days before the clothes had all gone to wallack, and the fathers had drunk it all up. One day I met one of the little boys for whom I bought a pair of boots only the day before. There was a snowstorm coming up, and he was barefooted. "Mike," says I, "how's this? Where are your shoes?" "Father and mother took them away," said he. There is a good deal lost we think in charity that's really doing a great deal of mischief, and the people must not think because we don't give them money to aid them in their poverty that we don't love them; for the money would go into their pockets to get whisky with. I do not know but what are all hypocrites and insincere in our love that we don't give them money. I believe if the prodigal son could have got all the money he wanted in that foreign country he would never have come home; and it was a good thing for him that he did get hard up and had to live on the husks that the swine ate. And it is a good thing that people should suffer. If they get a good living without work, they will never work. We can never make anything of them. God has decreed that man shall earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, and not live on other people.—From one of Mr. Moody's Sermons.

Some Nice Nests.

MICE sometimes choose very odd places in which to set up their small housekeeping. A lady one day took down a large loaf of bread, baked the day before, toasted up for her children's dinner. She found a little hole in one side which she followed up, and there, snug in the heart of the bread was a mother mouse and nine little mice. She had torn into shreds a nice, soft, copy-book, for the bottom of the nest, and when they got hungry they could just fall to and eat their bedclothes!

Another person, in pulling a large turnip in his field found the inside neatly hollowed out by a field mouse, and a litter of nine beans laid in for winter provisions.

A Cleveland mouse did worse mischief than that. He chewed up two hundred dollars' worth of greenbacks, and made a bed of them. But also the avenue to the green color did not agree with him. He was found dead in his bed

NOTHING IS LOST.

Where is the snow?
'Tis not long ago
It covered the earth with a veil of white,
We heard not its footsteps soft and light,
Yet lost it was in the orbiting bright;
Now it hath vanish'd away from sight.
Not a trace remains
In fields or lanes.

Where is the frost?
They are gone and lost:
The forms of beauty it gathymade,
The curious care on windows arrang'd.
"Be silent," it said; the brook obey'd,
The frost-work's wild glories all did fade:
At the smile of the sun
All was undone.

Where is the rain?
Pattering it came;
Dancing along with a merry sound,
A grassy bed in the fields it found;
Each drop rama on the leaf of a hand,
Where is the rain? It hath left the ground.
What good hath it done,
Going away so soon?

Ever,
Ever but endeavor
Beneath to feel like the melted snow:
We work—but our thankfulness where is it?
The seed we sow—but it will not grow.
The hopes, our reasons—where do they go?

Nothing is lost—
No more than the earth again
That came to enrich the earth again
We thank the Lord for the ever-existing gain
In saving over the hill and plain,
And the fruits, the springs from earth again,
All endeth in good—
Were not lost.

Never despair;
Disappointment bear.
Though hope seemeth vain, be patient still;
The good seasons bear will fulfill.
The land is weak, the powerful will
Be completing by life's work still.
The good endeavor
Is not lost, not never.

THE REWARD OF KINDNESS.

MRS. GORHAM put down a better she had been reading, and, looking around the table at her blooming daughters and two tall, handsome sons, she said, in a doleful tone:

"Your Aunt Sabina is coming to London, and has invited herself here without ceremony."

"When?" asked Arabella, with an intonation of intense disgust.

"She will reach here this afternoon. Wilbur, you will have to meet her."

"Sorry, ma'am, but I promised to drive Miss Caldwell to the park. Fred can go."

Certainly, I will go," Fred said, gravely, though there was a last flush on his brunette face, "I believe I am the only disengaged member of the household."

"Nonsense!" said his mother. "You have not seen her for fourteen years. I never saw a more disagreeable old farm after your father died."

"Nevertheless, I have a vivid recollection of Aunt Sabina's kindness while we were there."

"Dear me, Fred," drawled Lucilla, "I don't be sentimental; I wish the old thing would stay home. I can't imagine what she is coming here for."

"She's a rich old maid, my dear," said Fred, "and I cannot find anything surprising in her looking for a welcome amongst her brother's family."

Mrs. Gorham shrugged her shoulders. If she had spoken her thoughts, it would have been "Fred is so odd! Just like his father." But she only said: "She was dependent upon you, then, to meet your aunt, Fred? I will see about her room."

It was a source of great satisfaction to Mrs. Gorham that her eldest son had married an heiress of that city; also for the Brooklyn Eagle, there was a little money displayed; but these fellows were too sharp for me! What a fool I was after following Chloe Chester to Europe, and losing the thousand guineas for a husband. Ah, well, Miss Caldwell is very generous, and has introduced the stately beauty in her rustling silk to the little old-fashioned parlor on a farm.

"My aunt, Miss Gorham, Miss Caldwell."

They minaired the pictures together, and the young lady was cordial and chatty.

After they came down the steps, Miss Caldwell said:

"You must let your aunt drive an hour or two with me, Mr. Gorham. I am going to do some shopping, so I will not take your patience by inviting you to join us, but I shall be pleased if Miss Gorham will time with me, and you will call for her this evening."

Then she smiled again, made Sabina comfortable in the carriage, and drove off, leaving Fred in a state of delight far more than ever, as she intended he should be.

"He is a very prince of men," she thought, "and I will give him one day's rest. Bless the dear old soul, she has such blue eyes as my dear old grandmother."

Then she won Sabina's confidence, and found she was worrying about the purchase of certain household matters that would not go in the black leather trunk, and that she did not like to worry Fred about it.

She drove to the places where the best goods could be had, keeping guard over the slender purse against all imposition, till the last town was satisfactorily chosen and directed. Then she drove her home, and brought her to the room where "grandmother" was queen, knowing the dropped and mourned thinking of this buttress.

By four o'clock Fred was at the station waiting for Aunt Sabina. What a little, old-fashioned figure she was, in her quaint black bonnet, and large-figure shawl. But Fred knew her kindly old face at once, though he had not seen it since he was twelve years old.

She looked at the handsome face, and caught a quick, gasping breath.

"You must be one of John's boys," she said. How like you are to your father."

"I am Fred," he answered.

"Dear heart! How you've grown! Is your father dead?"

"She is waiting for you at home."

The good old countrywoman had never had the least doubt of a warm welcome at her brother's house, and Fred certainly confirmed her expectations. He found the old black leather trunk, the bag, the great bulging cotton umbrella, and put them all in the carriage, without one smile of ridicule. He made his aunt go to the restaurant and refresh herself before starting on the long drive home. He listened with respectful interest to all the mishaps of the long journey, and sympathized with the "flutation of every morsel, till I've got on, dear, in the dust and smoke."

And he elicited pleasantly of his child-ish recollections of the day home and wide farm where Sabina lived.

"You see," she told him, "I made up my mind this year I would come to London once more before I died. I've tried to before now, dear, but something or another always hindered. Dear, dear! You are all grown up, I s'pose, and you was but a lot o' babies last time poor John brought you to see me."

Curious is the summers, and she is eighteen. Wilbur is the only one older than I am."

"Yes, I remember. Well, dear, I'm glad that Debby's wife brought up such a fine family. I'm only an old maid, but I do love children and young folks."

Fred smiled to himself as the kindly old heart when home was reached at last, and how fashionably dressed ladies gave her a stately courteous greeting. But for the warm clasp of Fred's hand, I think she would have returned to the station in the same carriage she came, so wounded and sore she felt.

"Not one kiss," she thought, "and Fred kissed me at the train, right before all the folks."

Fred poured a silver coin into the hands of the servant girl who was to wait upon his aunt, promising another if she was kind to her, and went off to see about the old lady to her room. It was not often the young man's indignation found voice, though it grew hot over many shameful acts of which he was a witness. But even at home, one bold woman's words on that day that called a blush to the cheeks of the stalwart young man.

It was not a very busy season, and finding Sabina was likely to have a sorry time, Fred's sister and brother-in-law's family, Fred asked for a holiday, and appointed himself the chief of the party. He was too proud to care for the fact that the queer old-fashioned figure on his arm attracted a good deal of amused glance, but gravely stood by while a new dress for Debby, a dairy maid, and a very pretty sunny gang, and have but my money. They played on two soldiers and a half, and the last piece, which is virtually three-card monte, and they caught me on the fly." The conductor and reporters looked at each other and smiled, as they have frequently smiled over that oft-told tale at that hour before. The stranger continued: "I have been connected with the newspapers for the past fifteen years, and have written up all kinds of games in wicked Chicago for the issue of that city; also for the Brooklyn Eagle, there is no time so well employed; but these fellows were too sharp for me! What a fool I was after following Chloe Chester to Europe, and losing the thousand guineas for a husband. Ah, well, Miss Caldwell is very generous, and has introduced the stately beauty in her rustling silk to the little old-fashioned parlor on a farm.

"My aunt, Miss Gorham, Miss Caldwell."

They minaired the pictures together, and the young lady was cordial and chatty.

After they came down the steps, Miss Caldwell said:

"You must let your aunt drive an hour or two with me, Mr. Gorham. I am going to do some shopping, so I will not take your patience by inviting you to join us, but I shall be pleased if Miss Gorham will time with me, and you will call for her this evening."

Then she smiled again, made Sabina comfortable in the carriage, and drove off, leaving Fred in a state of delight far more than ever, as she intended he should be.

"He is a very prince of men," she thought, "and I will give him one day's rest. Bless the dear old soul, she has such blue eyes as my dear old grandmother."

Then she won Sabina's confidence, and found she was worrying about the purchase of certain household matters that would not go in the black leather trunk, and that she did not like to worry Fred about it.

She drove to the places where the best goods could be had, keeping guard over the slender purse against all imposition, till the last town was satisfactorily chosen and directed. Then she drove her home, and brought her to the room where "grandmother" was queen, knowing the Money-Getting as an Object of Life.

THE recent sudden death of A. T. Stewart, one of New York's merchant princes, right on the eve of a contemplated retirement, and after a business career which for brilliancy of success and prolific results has rarely been surpassed, inevitably lends one to stop and muse awhile upon the enduring moral value of such a life. As the information passed from lip to lip last Monday night, above the only comment we heard was this: His money couldn't save him after all. Is this all that can be said, or all which naturally comes to the lips for expression, after looking at such a career? Has such a life no lesson beyond its own powerlessness to prevent the approach and ravages of death? If so, then money-getting as an object of life is far from being so desirable as it has been usually considered to be. There must be some fatal defect in a life which leaves so slight an impress upon the public mind.

In estimating the value of such a life's work, there are two extremes of thought to be avoided. First, such a life must not be under-estimated, must not be passed over as entirely insignificant or worthless, because it results, after all possible discounting, some really valuable elements and fe atures. Such a life is undoubtedly superior to that of the lazy vagabond or the idle lounger; superior to that of the fashionable dresse or schooling speculator. Mr. Stewart began his career in business as a poor, humble boy; he employed remember than honorable-self-legitimate methods; he never departed his record from out of a single dollar. What he gained was the result solely of his industry and capacity, his devotion and singleness of aim, his zeal and energy in enterprising conjectures, his prudence and foresight in making investments and purchases. What ever may be said in regard to these wholly as the made of his vast wealth, nothing, certainly, can be brought against the method by which it was acquired.

There is also the value of such a life as an example to others just commencing a like career, especially to young men filled with an honorable ambition to emulate, if not surpass, the virtues of predecessors in the same line of work; its value upon the industries and accumulation of the nation as a whole; its value upon the National reputation abroad, as well as upon the National prosperity at home. In all these respects the career like that of A. T. Stewart, just closed, is a bright and shining light in the Temple of Human Achievement, a pleasant and suggestive picture hung up in the galleries of National memory.

But, on the other hand, such a life work must not be over-estimated, because, with all its brilliancy of success and its immensely profitable results, there are some notable and glaring defects which do not worthy of universal imitation. It can safely be affirmed that the judgment of mankind has long age settled upon it, on the basis of not long remembering or lightly appraising the career of any one who devotes his life to the mere accumulation of mere material gain. Such a life, in its best aspects, is nothing more than a supremely selfish life. Self-aggrandizement is its highest aim and end. The moral and intellectual welfare accessories to the fortune and possession of gain are disregard. All the higher and nobler elements of manhood are sacrificed before the altar of the god Mammon. What is scholar or a statesman dies, even though he be poor in material resources, the land mourns, the world mourns over the departure from its activities of so much available mental and moral power. There is so much wrought and power of character, so much ability, so much moral worth, literally abstracted from the sum total of the world's genital stock in higher good, and the vacuum created by such a loss is filled with reasoning cries of sincere lamentation and grief. But let a man of money-getting power die, and about the only source of public anxiety is in regard to the disposition of his property. The man himself is passed by and especially forgotten when concentrating and absorbing interest attaches to his life-work has reference to the amount in dollars and cents which it has gathered together.

No man, therefore, can devote himself exclusively to the acquisition and hoarding of property, without sinking himself, by so doing, to the estimation of God. Valuable as money is, much as the world needs it, it instinctively declares by its judgments upon those who give themselves up, soul and body, to its accumulation, that there is something more valuable, something more needed, while it is in the farmer's power to easily remedy the disease customer is himself. He has rates to be gratified, rights to be respected, and interests to be consulted, but how often are they actually outraged! Indeed, how seldom does he give them himself his tastes for recreation, how often violate his right to respectable clothing and reasonable respite from labor! This is not an evil due to monopoly or to be remedied by the concerted action of the grange. It is almost entirely an individual matter, and can only be cured by individual effort. The farmer should look at himself and his family, as his own chief customers, who should have value received for their money and time, and live in comfort, health and contentment; and when he does so the accidental occurrence of twenty-five pound keg of powder in his hands when a spark of fire from the bluff overhead flew into it, causing the powder to explode, and the blast to be driven with great force into the rock; a number of pieces were hurled off, his eyesight was not destroyed. Woodly was snapping near him in the act of picking to a spade, and was also injured. Both were wrapped up in blankets and taken to the Penitentiary, where their injuries were examined by Dr. Janisch. One fragment penetrated a negro prisoner had a ladder on his shoulder within a few feet of the spot when a portion of the keg struck him. He stumbled and fell, his hand being hurt in the fall. Wall and Woodly were resting under last night, and no serious danger is apprehended from the opposite side of the

A Verdant Reporter from Brooklyn.

IS our frequent reports of the fleecing of passengers on the Central Road by professional gamblers we have always suggested that the victims would not have been robbed if they had declined a game of cards. Occasionally, however, a pleasant fellow is found and, only enough, to make the victim feel that he is a "sucker" on the wickedness of all cities—Brooklyn. At a quarter to five a. m. Saturday two Brooklyn reporters were said, "on the road" to the scene of the St. Louis express east, when they were approached by a well-dressed and intelligent looking man, who said: "Mr. Conductor, I thought I knew all the tricks of gamblers, but I have been piled up between you and cure and I'll be a pretty stump gang, and have lost my money. They played on two soldiers and a half, and the last piece, which is virtually three-card monte, and they caught me on the fly." The conductor and reporters looked at each other and smiled, as they have frequently smiled over that oft-told tale at that hour before. The stranger continued: "I have been connected with the newspapers for the past fifteen years, and have written up all kinds of games in wicked Chicago for the issue of that city; also for the Brooklyn Eagle, there is no time so well employed; but these fellows were too sharp for me! A Visit to a Japanese Silver Mine.

A WRITER in the Hiogo News lately paid a visit to the great silver mine of Ikuno, Japan, where European machinery has been introduced with great success; and as his account of what he saw is of considerable interest, we condense from it the following notes: On the hillside above the works, the objects which first attract the visitor's notice are the house (on a small platform) of the stationary engine, used to work the shaft now being driven down into the rock; a number of places like large rabbit-holes, and a tramway which runs round the face of the hill and connects these holes with a series of sheets down which the ore is passed to the works. These holes turn out to be galleries cut first by air) which already measures eight miles in length; in Thus some is the process of removing Ore-ore by blasting, the fosses for which were at first imported from abroad, but are now made on the premises, at a saving of more than seventy five per cent. The ore is broken up into pieces at the mouths of the shoots, the least rich lumps and those containing a large amount of other minerals are set apart for reamagation at convenience, while the best pieces are sorted into five classes, their estimated values ranging from about £16 to £1.600 per ton. These are pounded into dust in rumbling mills and the dust baked in ovens with common salt (chloride of sodium). Hitherto the silver has been combined with sulphur, but in these ovens a chemical change takes place, the chlorine of the common salt combining with the silver and the ton or twelve per cent. of gold which the ore contains, and the sulphur of the silver combining with the sodium of the salt to make Epsom salt, which goes off in vapor. The baked dust or fine ore—now a red earth—is then, by means of water and iron balls, thoroughly mixed with a large quantity of quicksilver by the aid of revolving drums. After this process the quicksilver takes up the precious metal, and when the amalgamation is complete, the drums are emptied into tubs and washed away. The combined metals are next treated by hydraulic pressure against a leather sleeve, through which the quicksilver is forced, leaving pretty like, brilliant white amalgam. Heated in iron retorts, the remaining mercury in the amalgam is driven off and is condensed to be used again; and the resulting lumps of metal having been fused with borax, which brings away some scoriæ and other impurities in the form of a slag, are cast into molds and sent to the mint at Osaka. The metal contains in the form in which it leaves Ikuno about seventy per cent. of silver and ten of gold, the remaining twenty per cent. being nearly pure copper. The power utilized to drive the machinery at the Ikuno mines is mainly water, which is brought four miles and a half in an artificial canal, and is used for nine months in the year at 250 gallons a second, with a fall of 100 feet. During the rest of the year this water supply fails and the works are

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medicinal powers and properties of vegetables, and their extracts and juices. At the end of seventeen years he found he had discovered the secret of combining the medicinal properties of vegetables with the Magnetism of Electricity, the power of the sun and moon, so as to produce a remedy for a vital and acute formulations of the human system.

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful vegetable principles with the Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success in healing wounds, and all diseases in the skin, in the short space of six days, is due entirely to the age and care for a vital and acute formulations of the human system.

His Pocket Pills, while they remain subject to the control of the Magnetic Ointment, have the power of the sun and moon, so as to produce a remedy for a vital and acute formulations of the human system.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone and tissue with its searching and diffusive influence, and disease is reached and eradicated, wherever it may be located, in the system, however deep-seated or obstinate.

Numerous instances are on record where the remedy has restored health in patients so far gone that the nearest friends had given them up as incurable.

No patient ever need die with consumption while the Magnetic Ointment can be procured.

Acute Inflammatory Rheumatism is conquered in the most severe cases, when prepared. For Inflammatory Rheumatism it is unrivaled.

In electrynine cases out of a hundred, it will afford instant relief to the worst kind of Nervous Headache in three minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this ointment is of unknown value.

All cases of the Spine, Ulceration, Inflammation, Internal Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Consumption, Liver Complaint, Diabetes, Kidney Disease, Bowel Complaint, Sore Eyes, Rheumatism, Blood Poisoning, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Blood Sores, Scalds, Burns, &c., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment and Pills.

THE current fact has recently been published in the U. S. Statistics that the consumption of tea seasons have a point upward, increasing in the past some years ago, in a central establishment in Baghdad, a number of men were collected and their measurements of clothing, dress, head, etc., practically the same for each individual. The medical superintendent of the said unanimous investigations, extended over some nine years, and during which about 900 individuals were weighed. It was found that during the summer months of winter the body wastes, the lassos weight varying in increasing ratio that during summer the body gains, the gain varying in an increasing ratio, and that the average from gain to loss said from loss to gain are always, and take place, the first on the beginning of September, and the second at the beginning of April. This is shown in the following figures, indicating the ratio of loss or gain between January 1 to February 0 24, March 0 95, Gain—April 0 05, May 0 01, June 0 52, July 0 00, August 0 26, Loss—September 0 21, October 0 10, November (exceptional) 0 slight gain, December 0 02.

Terrible Self-Torture Committed by Fanatics in Colorado.

A CORRESPONDENT of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat writes from Saguache, Col., describing the peculiar observances of the Penitentes lately in the week before was reported in these that a man was to be crucified on the Friday succeeding. To the south of Saguache, about fifteen miles, there is a large settlement of Mexicans, called Carnosa. It is close to the foot of the mountain range, and its inhabitants are engaged in stock herding and agriculture. In company with ex Mayor Barker, of Denver, your correspondent left Saguache at ten a. m. to witness this strange performance. We arrived at Mr. Royal's ranch at about one p. m., and after a rosy lunch, required to the scene which was taking place about a mile up the creek from his house, and immediately back of his ranch. We were informed by Mr. Royal that the fun would not just commenced, and were in time.

Four heavy, wooden crosses, about fifteen feet high, had been erected at intervals of about 300 feet, each, with one exception, bearing a Latin inscription.

On the first cross was this legend, "Ni mai Cruz," naught but cleverness. On the next, "Non Dominus frustra." "Less God be with you, but in vain," and on the third, "Omnia ad Dei gloriam." All meanings to the glory of God." The fourth your correspondent has forgotten. There were eighteen penitents—divided up into groups of four, and six attendants to each group. Each penitent, with two exceptions, wore a black mask or sack drawn completely over the head, and fastened about the neck. The other two were red masks. Whether the shiverness of color in the masks represented a different degree of crime or not we failed to ascertain. The leader of each band carried something resembling a watchman's rattle. He was followed by another attendant playing a small reed flute. The other four attendants chanted in a low, monotonous tone some Spanish words that we could not understand. Aside from the masks the penitents were nothing but a pair of the thinnest kind of knit drawers. Each one of the group, penitents and attendants, carried an "aszle," or scourge, made from the leaf of the soap-weed. It is very tough and fibrous, and was braided at the ends about four inches wide, and perhaps three feet long. The line of march was from one cross to the other, and at each cross a halt was made of about five minutes.

At every step they lashed themselves with these "aszles," until the blood fairly spirted from every pore. They took sharp pieces of flint, and lacerated the fleshy parts of the body until they were literally a mass of bleeding flesh.

Whenever one fell down from exhaustion and loss of blood, which occurred every quarter or two, one of the attendants took his scourge and beat him until he got up again.

In one group a heavy log-chain was fastened to each ankle of the penitent, and the attendants took hold and dragged him feet foremost over beds of cactus or prickly pear plant, which abound in this country. Occasionally they would air give a sudden jerk together, and fairly lift him from the ground. This dragging would continue perhaps ten minutes each time. Another penitent had a cowhide cut up into strips, and would wind it at tightly as possible around his arms and legs until the circulation was completely stopped, and the flesh seemed to be hardening and black. He remained, or was to remain, in this condition twenty-four hours. Every time they reached a table that stood near the upper cross, as at which came out, and, with a large sponge, washed them with vinegar. Occasionally the monotony was varied by a penitent taking on his back a huge cross, and bearing it until he fell prostrate under its weight. The cross was about a foot thick either way, about eighteen feet long, and the arm about nine feet. On this cross was actually painted in letters of blood "La Passion en Cristo." Spanish, and signifying "Suffering by faith."

Two penitents had died the night before we got there from this treatment, and one had been actually crucified. We were not permitted to go to the spot where the crucifixion took place, as, being near Saguache, and consequently subject to visits of strangers, they feared our mission on the grounds. The only American gentleman who saw the body on the cross was a ranchman living in the immediate neighborhood. Nails had been driven through each foot, just above the ankle, and through the hands. A gentleman who was on the ground on Saturday says that three more will not recover.

Last year, on this same spot, a man was crucified also, and these same attendants perpetrated. No one dare say a word, and the whites in the vicinity are powerless to interfere, as their stock ranges and houses are at the mercy of these people.

These penitents believe that it they die undergoing this self-imposed torture they will at once be translated straight to heaven. If they survive, their sins are pardoned for the remainder of their lives.

Her Cake Was All Dough.

FIFTY years old it a day, and her name was Eliza Fox. She lives on National avenue, and she made a trip to the eastern portion of the city to get a recipe for making cake. She got the recipe, got some beer, and got in the station, and she wasn't half as anxious about her case as some of the audience. She slowly followed high out, musing:

"Use about a pint of flour, put in a chunk of butter about as large as a walnut, and break in—"

"Now, then," interrupted his Honor, "This looks bad to see a woman of your age here."

"Well, I had some beer," she softly replied, "and break in four eggs, grate in your lemon-peel, stir well, and bake in a hot oven."

"What have you to say about this case?" asked the Court.

"Nothing. You can do all the talking—quart of flour—four eggs—lemon peel—mustang—hot oven—"

"Did you ever come here before?"

"I don't remember that I was. Will you tell a perfect dozen for me before I go?"

"I've got a recipe for ending drunkenness, replied his Honor.

"I don't want it, and after the cake has baked for fifteen minutes remove from the oven and put on your frosting."

"Do you want to go to the House of Correction?" queried the Court.

"No, sir, I don't. What do I want to go tramping way up there for?"

"But you were so sadly intoxicated that the officer had to hire an express wagon to bring you down here."

"Is that so? Then I came here by express, did I? Why I packed in a hoss!"

"You must be very careful in future. It's a bad thing for a woman to get drunk."

"No worse than 'tis for the man, and after the frosting is on set the cake back in the oven for three or four minutes."

"Will you promise me?" asked the Court.

"Yes, I'll promise!" she angrily exclaimed, "but I wish you wouldn't talk as much—you make me all out."

She stood off and glared at His Honor, and then, tapping her finger on the railing continued:

"You take a quart of flour—about a quart. You put in a hunk of butter about as big as a walnut, and you break in three or four—"

"You may break out," said the Court.

"Well, I will. I want to get somewhere where I can write down that recipe before I forget it."

She pushed her way through the crowd to the door, and as she stepped out she was heard muttering:

"Quart of flour—four eggs—five minutes"—Detroit Free Press.

A Reduction in Dress Expenses—Good Taste and Economy.

THERE is evidence that fashionable women and those who cater for their tastes, are taking more sensible and practical views in regard to the importance or making economy a ruling principle in spring outfits. At an opening of fashionable Spring dresses, outside garments and millinery in a leading dry-goods establishment in Boston, last week, several hopeful and noteworthy proofs of a long desired and imperative reform were plainly perceptible. In the first place, everything on exhibition was made in the establishment. Not an imported costume or hat was to be seen. But such was the elegance and variety of the show, that the absence of the usual foreign element would not have been detected, unless attention had been called to the novel feature. Good taste, as well as economy, had an influence in the new departure. It is said that the importers of French costumes find that they do not sell to advantage. A woman of the best taste prefers to select a suitable material, and have it made in a manner that suits her style, and makes the garment look when it is worn as if it belonged to her, and not to some one else. Therefore, while we admire the attire, the elegance of French costumes it is far more satisfactory and in better taste to be economical with simpler costumes made at home, with some idea of adaptation to the requirements of the wearer. A still more gorgeous fashion is found in the fact that articles of home manufacture should be much cheaper than imported ones, and in these days, when sensible women are determined to be economized in expenditure, any change that is at the same time fashionable and less costly, will be looked upon with favor.

Oxford suits formed another feature of the exhibition. These are wash dresses made in Oxford plaids and stripes, are considered very stylish, and will be worn for street costumes during the summer. They are all made in the same style, with underskirt, overskirt, and a jacket with a long, loose front. They sell, ready made, for $15, and, of course, ladies who can make their own dresses, the cost will be much less.

Another economical feature at this opening consisted of the revival of the names of embroidered wool materials. Overskirts and sacks in camel's hair, at a great variety of shades, were offered for about $20. To those who have an old silk dress to make into a skirt, one of these costumes nicely matching the color, makes with it an inexpensive and elegant suit.

In the millinery department, a marked feature was the display of hats and bonnets at the low price of $5. Among the hats were trimmed a large number specially suited for school-girls. These comprised hats and bonnets reduced in much credit upon the establishment, and met with great favor from purchasers, as they supply a want that has long been felt, a creditable bonnet which is not costly, nor too good for common wear.

Of course there were at this opening exquisite costumes of the most costly materials, gotten up regardless of expense, and dainty bonnets by the score, costing small fortunes; but when one of the leading establishments in New England makes a specialty of economized attire, and women approve the plan, we now hope that there is a prospect of reaching, at no distant day, that "golden line," which is to be the foundation of our future prosperity.—Providence (R. I.) Journal.

A Railroad to Go Across the Eastern Continent.

The great feat accomplished by the United States in connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by a railroad across the United States is stimulating enterprise in Europe, and it is now proposed to unite the plan is matured—to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by a railroad through Central Asia. At a convention of the geographers, recently held, Col. Bigelhamoitr explained some of the difficulties of the road, which it is expected will overcome one of the greatest obstacles to the extension of civilization—namely, the separation of a large part of Asia from Europe by vast deserts, in which no means of transit but a railroad could be of any use. A railroad alone can unlock the resources in the mineral wealth of Siberia and the Ural Mountains is well known, the exploration and mining of their regions would be encouraged and their resources developed. It is proposed that the road shall start from Nijnil Novgorod, in Russia, where is now the extreme eastern station in the network of European railroads. It will run along the Volga, the Kama, to Ekaterinburg, on the Asiatic side of the Ural Mountains; then enter Asia, proceed in the direction of Tiumen and Omsk at the Irtish; cross the river, proceed by way of Kulnsk to Tomsk on the Tom, a branch of the Obl, and cross that river. Tomsk is the principal point of commerce of Western Siberia; thence the road will run directly to Irkutsk at Lake Baikal; thence the road is to pass to the frontier of China, and thence it is no longer an exclusively Russian, but an international undertaking. The first section from Nijnil Novgorod to Tomsk runs on perfectly level land (the so-called steppes), similar to our prairies. In the second section from Tomsk to Lake Baikal the country is rolling and interspersed with rivers and streams; but the grades height is only 3,500 feet, and largest rivers are but very moderate width and depth. The only serious difficulties, as we have said, lie at the Chinese frontier, and they are inferior to those overcome in the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada by the American engineers. Russia has raised in fifteen years more than $1,000,000,000 with which to construct 15,000 miles of railroad, and can easily find $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 to construct a line of such value to all the civilized world.—Scientific American.

The Work of the Mound Builders.

THE Hon. T. H. Morgan has already won high repute by his philosophical studies of the ethnology of this continent. A vast mass of material concerning the early races of North and Central America has been accumulated for the greater part in a fragmentary way, and the effort to systematize it and draw from it a definite history, deserves, even though it should not fully achieve, success. One of the toughest of Cambodiana connected with such an attempt is presented by the relics of the Mound Builders. Their earthworks, their graves, their skeletons, are a puzzle without a key. There has been abundant speculation on the subject, and on insufficient grounds the origin of the Mound Builders has been ascribed to Judea, Phœnicia, Egypt, China, Siberia, the Islands of the Pacific and the South American Continent. Prof. Morgan has at last attacked this problem. He began this morning the reading of his paper entitled "A Conjectural Restoration of a Pueblo of the Mound Builders," with the premise that "a conjecture is sometimes worth the time spent upon it." It is necessary first to consider carefully some practices and usages of the aborigines which were general among them over a wide area. We find, for instance, that the custom of burying implements, their copper tools, their textile and fictile fabrics, were in addition to the Indian tribes found east of the Mississippi.

We find in Yucatan and Chiapas the highest type of Village Indian life. It is found also, at a distance northward in Mexico and New Mexico. It was best adapted to a warm climate. The attempt to transplant this mode of life from the life of the Spanish race in the temperate zone of Mexico and then northward to the Pueblo, must have been a doubtful experiment, and the ruins of Pueblo houses, the structures left by the Mound Builders in those such as attempt; their earthworks may be regarded as the dwelling site of Village Indians. It is never any pity in his heart for those he saw suffer."

And then came a whole crowd of beasts and birds, and they stood a while and looked, and then they went on, and it will always be as light as a puff, a not too much crowded in the pot.

A bird has for marking clothes, which is not excelled by soap, silkaline or soda is prepared as follows: Enough of finely powdered cinnabar to form a moderate thick liquid is very intimately mixed with egg albumen previously diluted with an equal bulk of water and beaten to a froth, and filtered through fine linen. Marks formed on cloth with this liquid by means of a quill are fixed after they have become dry by pressing the cloth on the other side with a hot iron. The ink will keep in well closed bottles for a long time without separation of the suspended cinnabar. A black indelible ink is made one and two-thirds part of nitrate of silver in sixteen parts of distilled water, and adding two parts of gum arabic and one-third part of sap green

An English writer gives the following directions for testing clocks, which suit all metal clocks, and the larger and coarser they are the better. Dip a feather into common paraffine oil, such as are used for lamps, and touch up all the oily pinions of the clock, especially axles and holes, then let the clock stand a few hours, give more paraffine, and touch oftener if you think it is better for it. Afterward strew strong washing powder among the wheels, etc., and plunge the clock into a strong solution of the same in boiling water. Let it lie therein till the water gets cool enough to place your hands in. Then with a soft brush rubbed with soap, wash out the dirt from the work. Afterward, Choose completely from all traces of soap and powder in plenty of warm water, and the operation is complete, the clock not having required to be taken asunder at all. Many an old clock could be brought by this method, which if taken asunder, even by skilled hands, would never tick again, owing to many portions of wheels being placed in contact.

A Garden Extraordinary.

ONE of our considerable seed firms in arranging their stock for last spring's business, laid aside a large quantity of flower seeds which remained over after the previous years' business. Unwilling to sell seed of doubtful vitality, the firm sowing pan was hit upon for a disposal of it which should provide an amount of pleasure and a profitable return. The article is published in the American Garden, and we give as much of it as our space permits:

We plowed a strip about six feet wide all around a five-acre field, close to the fence. On this plowed ground (not seed—previously well mixed—washroom, just as it happened to come. The rain fare having, afterward, been smoothed over, we waited the result. This proved more than satisfactory. We had a wild garden indeed! The plants came up as thickly as they could grow, and flourished and blossomed as freely as though they had enjoyed all the care usually given to delicate and house exotics. Sweet Alyssum, Mignonette, Pinks Drummondi, seemed to cover the ground. Morning Glories of every shade, and delicate Cypress vines, tried be cover the fences and run up every tree. Quaint little yellow and green Gourds appeared in the most unexpected places, and the Winnie feed seemed in a blaze with the brilliant Eschscholtzia, Marigolds and Zinnias.

Every morning would find some new and unexpected flower in bloom. In short, the place was a constant delight all summer to each member of the family, as also to the neighbors. The children, especially, who reveled in a garden where they planted were kept free of the excitement of hunting for something new.

"A quantity of the same seed was sown in the adjacent woods. Many of these germinated—and the sight of Morning Glories running up the trees in the wildest part of the woods, and bunches of Balsam and Zinnia and Asters looking up through the underbrush was, indeed, pleasing strange and prompitive of intense enjoyment.

Those who putter over the planting of such seeds in pans and frames, may learn a lesson from the more rough and ready treatment.—Rural New Yorker.

Oats.

AMONG the objections which some farmers make to this crop are the following:

1. It is an uncertain crop.
2. It is not a good crop with which to seed down the land.
3. It is not profitable.
4. It weakens the land.

Each of those objections allow me briefly to reply:

1. It is not consider this objection well founded. In my experience I have had as good success with oats as with almost any crop which I ever tried to cultivate. If the land is at all suitable, is well fitted to receive the seed, and the sowing is done early, a good crop is almost sure to be obtained. Most of the failures which I have ever known with this crop resulted from putting it on wet, undrained land, or else from late sowing. Too much water will rain oats and late sowing will be fatal to success in their cultivation.

2. While this is not the best crop with which to lay down land to grass, yet if the soil is finely pulverized, and a sufficient quantity of grass seed is used there will seldom be any difficulty in getting a good stand. I never sow less than two bushels, and almost always obtain good results.

3. This objection, it seems to me, must be made by men who do not know a good thing when they see it, or understand the culture of the crop. Where there is a fair market the crop can be made to pay well. This is the chief objection which many farmers have to growing oats. But the impression which so widely prevails that oats impoverish the land is one for which I see no reasonable basis. It is true that after a crop of oats is taken off, the land is not usually in as good condition as it was before the removal of the crop, but it must be remembered that the straw of oats is much less exhausting to the land than corn, but it is the fault of the farmer that the land, which can be said upon as substantially correct, a good crop of oats is much less exhausting to the land than any good crop of either wheat, corn, or rye. Of the three great elements of plant food which are furnished by the soil, the oat crop requires but a moderate amount of potash and phosphoric acid, and requires nearly less than either of the other crops named.

I believe the oat crop is worthy of a great deal more attention than it has received in the past, and I am confident that with good culture it can be made very profitable.—Indiana Farmer.

About Scarecrows.

NOW THAT the planting season is at hand, we have no doubt but that many a farmer will endeavor to scare the birds off from the cast-off garments, which, stuffed with straw, are to be set up in the fields where the seed is just planted, but we have never had much faith in this artifice. Crows are possessed of much more wisdom than is generally credited to them; and while an immovable bundle of rags may drive them away for a short time, we believe that eventually they discover the trick, and, as they do not bite, speedily completely picking up young corn as it comes within the shadow of as an elaborate trap. Better plan is to gather up the seed in small scarecrow as fast as planted, and bring them from an elastic string, and hang them from an elastic string, and the sowing is done early, a good crop is almost sure to be obtained. Most of the failures which I have ever known with this crop resulted from putting it on wet, undrained land, or else from late sowing. Too much water will rain oats and late sowing will be fatal to success in their cultivation.

THE ANGELS' LADDER.

"If there were a ladder, mother,
Reaching to earth and sky,
As in the days of the Bible,
I would bid you all good-bye,
And go through every country,
And search from town to town,
Till I had found the ladder,
With angels coming down.

"Then I would wait, quite softly,
Beside the lowest round,
Till the sweetest looking angel
Had stepped upon the ground;
I would pull his dazzling garment,
And speak out very plain:
Will you take me, please, to heaven,
When you go back again?"

"Ah, darling," said the mother,
"You need not wander so
To find the golden ladder
Where angels come and go.
Wherever gentle kindness,
Or pitying love abounds,
There is the wondrous ladder
With angels on the rounds."

YACOH AND HIS DONKEY.

YACOH was the name of an Arab boy in the Oriental city of Cairo. He was poor, and, like most of the poor boys of that city, his chief ambition was to own a donkey and hire him out to the travelers to go to the pyramids and other places of interest in the neighborhood of Cairo. As that is the only way in the manner of amusement for strangers; that is, when the animal was mounted by the traveler he ran behind, poking the quadruped with a sharp stick to keep him in a trot.

One day, while Yacoh was strolling in front of Shepherd's Hotel in Cairo, shilling he had saved up in his own, an English traveler on the veranda beckoned to him and asked him why he looked so wistful, and Yacoh answered that he was unhappy because he had no donkey.

And when the Englishman heard his story, he called his servant and told him to bring up Saddik, which was an old sleepy donkey. Then he said to Yacoh:

"Would you be happy if you owned that donkey, my lad?"

"Oh, master, I would be happy with any donkey!" said Yacoh.

"Then," said the Englishman, "he is yours—he is a present from me."

When he said this, the other travelers gathered around, with smiles on their faces, for it appeared that the Englishman was a man much given to making fun. He told Yacoh to get on the donkey and ride him up and down in front of the hotel a few times, and see how he liked him.

Then the cat. "I do not care. If you kill him," said she "what is that to me? The cow came next. "He is yours like," said she. "If he comes to grief what is that to me?" Then the dog. "I never pay pity in his heart for those he saw suffer."

I shall give the donkey a name that will draw custom for you," said the English man, as he rode into the starting place.

Yacoh was much pleased that his benefactor should give the donkey a name, for he had seen some of his companions who had had their donkeys named by their owners, on account of fortunate names given to them by travelers.

"I shall be very much obliged to call him what my master pleases," said Yacoh.

"Then his name shall be Lightning," said the Englishman, and the other travelers laughed.

So long as he was safe and well himself.

One day, as he sent through a field, he heard a sad cry, and, looking round, saw a sheep in a stream. "Help me, oh, help! or I shall tied-rowned," she cried.

The dog could have pulled her out, for he was strong, and could swim well. But to her cry he said, "What is that to me?" and went on.

The sheep was not drowned; for the stream took her down to a place where the bank was low, and she could get out; but she owed the dog no thanks for that.

He went on till he thought he must find some food, and just then he caught sight of a cat in the yard of a house near by. The cat had a jam of milk, which she seemed to like; for the purred as she lapped it.

"If there!" cried the dog: "I want that milk!"

The cat arched her back, and growled, but said not a word. She thought the dog would not come in; but he did, and with a snarl, allowing his great teeth, drove her from the pan.

"Oh, do not take it all, I pray!" cried the cat: "it is all I shall have." But the dog only growled, and went on eating.

"What is that to me? I don't care," said the dog. And he drank it all up, and went on, well pleased.

By-and-by, he was the same. He would not help a poor cow that had got shut out of her field, though he knew of a gap in the hedge by which she could have got back. He would not take the pains to point out the way to the old oak in the wood, when a young bird who had strayed too far from its nest asked him. To each and all he would say, "What is that to me? I don't care."

At last he came to a great wood. He was tired, and soon went to sleep. In his sleep he dreamed, that, all at once, a great wolf came out of the wood, and seized hold of him. "Save me! save me!" he cried.

"Why should I save you?" said the wolf, with a fierce grin in his eye. "Is there one who would say a good word for you?"

At this speech, the sheep who had once been in the dog to help her came out of the wood.

"I have a word to say," she said, "but you—I mean the wolf—will not like it."

When he said this, the other travelers gathered around, with smiles on their faces, for it appeared that the Englishman was a man much given to making fun. He told Yacoh to get on the donkey and ride him up and down in front of the hotel a few times, and see how he liked him.

An English writer gives the following directions for testing clocks, which suit all metal clocks, and the larger and coarser they are the better. Dip a feather into common paraffine oil, such as are used for lamps, and touch up all the oily pinions of the clock, especially axles and holes, then let the clock stand a few hours, give more paraffine, and touch oftener if you think it is better for it. Afterward strew strong washing powder among the wheels, etc., and plunge the clock into a strong solution of the same in boiling water. Let it lie therein till the water gets cool enough to place your hands in. Then with a soft brush rubbed with soap, wash out the dirt from the work. Afterward, Choose completely from all traces of soap and powder in plenty of warm water, and the operation is complete, the clock not having required to be taken asunder at all. Many an old clock could be brought by this method, which if taken asunder, even by skilled hands, would never tick again, owing to many portions of wheels being placed in contact.

A Garden Extraordinary.

ONE of our considerable seed firms in arranging their stock for last spring's business, laid aside a large quantity of flower seeds which remained over after the previous years' business. Unwilling to sell seed of doubtful vitality, the firm sowing pan was hit upon for a disposal of it which should provide an amount of pleasure and a profitable return. The article is published in the American Garden, and we give as much of it as our space permits:

We plowed a strip about six feet wide all around a five-acre field, close to the fence. On this plowed ground (not seed—previously well mixed—washroom, just as it happened to come. DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR—Your medicines, Golden Medical Discovery, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and Pleasant Purgative Pellets, have done more for me than any one hundred doctors with all their nonsense. I was given up by the doctors to die with consumption, and was reduced to a mere skeleton, and had to be helped from my bed to my chair. I had used many doctors with no benefit. I finally procured one bottle of your Golden Medical Discovery and one bottle of your Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and commenced their use. At first I was badly discouraged, for the taking of the medicine of the discovery I began to improve, and when I had taken the remaining I was well. In addition to the use of Discovery I applied and inhaled it through the Catarrh Remedy, as you advise in pamphlet wrapper, and it entirely conquered it. Words can't express the most wonderful blood purifier ever discovered. Three bottles of it which should procure an amount of its light. Yours gratefully, MRS. L. CRAIPER

Most medicines which are advertised as "blood purifiers and liver regulators" contain either mercury, in some form, or poisonous and bitter vegetable principles. All of these agents have strong tendency to break down the blood corpuscles, and destroy and otherwise permanently injure the human system, and should be shunned. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, on the contrary, contains the active medicinal extracts of native plants, barks and roots, found in our forests, by us. Its effects being strengthening and curative only. Golden Medical Discovery enjoys quite a reputation as a blood purifier, is a remedy for thirty years, and may well give place to what is doing, to the more positive and valuable vegetable alteratives which have met with universal favor. We build a wild garden indeed! The plants came up as thickly as they could grow, and flourished and blossomed as freely as though they had enjoyed all the care usually given to delicate and house exotics. Sweet Alyssum, Mignonette, Pinks Drummondi, seemed to cover the ground. Morning Glories of every shade, and delicate Cypress vines, tried be cover the fences and A Night's Adventure in a Western Hotel.

"Oh," said the Judge, alluding to the circuit rider's description of his nocturnal adventure, "that ain't nothin' out of the way. Did you ever hear the story of Bit Grooks when he sprawled with the Shanter down to the Rising Sun?"

Friar William never had heard of it, and was not acquainted with "Bit Grooks."

"Wal," said the Judge, "you see 'Old Bill' he was the agent for the lown land Company, and he had to go travelin' through those parts, and then go East to meet the company and settle up his accounts. One night Old Bill he turned up at the Squire's, head first, ont. 'Dig me in fast,' says he, 'or I'll die!'

"Ain't got no bed," said the Squire; 'five agents of the Minnesota Land Purchasing Company just arrived, and I've given them my room!'

"'Can't help it,' says Bill; 'I tell you I'll die if you don't let me have some sleep; they've gone out; put me in there till they come home.'

"So the Squire gave him some supper, and Bill turned in. The old fellow no sooner got in that room, with them Five Minnesota chaps' duds all over the place, than he began to barricade the door. First he brought the bureau and stood it against the door, then he hauled around the bed, and wedged the washstand and trunks in so as to make one strong brace of the furniture the against the room. After that Bill felt more easy about his sleep. About ten o'clock the Minnesota chaps came back and tried their door, but couldn't get in.

"'What in the darkness is on now?' said Old Dodge. 'Who's in our room?'

Then the Squire came round and begged Old Bill to get out.

"'Can't do it,' roared Bill.

"'You must,' said the Colonel.

"'No, I won't,' barked Brooks. 'You must get some other place now; I'm most dead.'

"I'll break every panel through with my bowie-knife,' shouted the Colonel.

"'Very well,' said Bit; 'the moment your bowie-knife comes through I'll let my self-acting barrel revolver.'

"'Oh, don't, don't, gentlemen,' said the Squire; 'I can't have a murder here; for Brooks's sake, stop this, or you'll ruin my house. Here, Colonel, turn into the parlor.'

"So the Colonel gave it up, and they slept in the parlor that night, and Bit Crooks arrived away until eight o'clock. The next morning they all turned up at breakfast. Bill looked mighty cheap, and there was no disguising himself.

"'So you are the individual who was going to blow my brains out last night with your seven-barreled revolver?' said the Colonel, addressing the Dother agent as he was dissecting his buckstrak.

"'And you are the Pillow who was going to open the panels with your bowie-knife, are you?' said Bit.

"'Yes,' said the Colonel, 'and how did you find them?'

"'Never saw so scared in my life,' said Bill. 'I was shaking all over, for you see I hadn't the ghost of a pistol!'

"Well,' laughed the Colonel, 'you couldn't have been more frightened than I was, for I hadn't the sign of a bowie-knife!'"—Adventures of a Circuit-Rider," in Appleton's Journal.

The French and German Armies

We believe that the French army, in spite of what has been written in this country on the subject, is making great progress in every way. Work is being done silently and well. We have just seen the letter of an accomplished French officer, stating that the work, until a few days ago, was really too hard, and dwelling on the serious amount of duty imposed by the training of reservists. We see that in Paris the cavalry regimentary belt, drilled to take the rail at night-time, and, by the lantern dimly burning, a squadron rides up to a station, dismounts, piles arms, unsaddles, installs its chargers in the railway boxes, packs up hay and corn, and takes its place in the carriages. Once ready for a start, orders are given to disembark, and man and steeds are broken to this new service—conveyance of cavalry. An important measure of unification is the treatment of the German wounded is about to be effected. The Bavarian General, Podewills, twitnesser of a system of nursing which has been in full swing in the Bavarian troops, has just constructed a model cartilage, filling both the regulation Werder (Havarian) and the Mauser (Prussian) rifle. This cartilage has been issued already to the Bavarian troops, and is likely to be adopted also in Prussia.—London Army and Navy Gazette.

TO ALL, particularly invalids, spring is a trying season. Indications of sickness should at once be attended to. Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are not a vile fancy drink, made of cheap rum, whiskey, and refuse liquors, doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called by some manufacturers Tonics, Appetizers, Restorers, &c., that lead the unfortunate victim on from the first glass to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the great Blood Purifier and a Life-Giving Principle; a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the wonderful curative properties of Vinegar Bitters in relieving and curing all diseases of the Stomach, Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder. They are the great Blood Purifier and a Life-Giving Principle; a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the wonderful curative properties of Vinegar Bitters in relieving and curing all diseases of the Stomach, Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder.

No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones have not been destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair. Nine-tenths of all the diseases of the human family are caused directly or indirectly by impure blood. Dyspepsia, Bilious Attacks, Sick Headache, Constipation, Sour Stomach, Eruptions of the Skin, Sores, Blotches, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Blood, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Bilious, Remittent, Intermittent and Malarial Fevers, which are caused by Vitiated Blood, Vinegar Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by a disordered condition of the Digestive Organs.

No system can long remain healthy if the digestive organs are allowed to become deranged. Keep the blood pure by the occasional use of this medicine, and all will be well.

Pin, Tape and other Worms, lurking in the human system, are effectually destroyed and removed. For full directions, read carefully the circular around each bottle, and use as directed.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or the turn of life, this medicine has no equal. It acts like a charm in the most distressing cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, this medicine has

OUR RADIX LETTER.

Jealous Gotham — May-Day — Bad for Bankrupts.

Uncle Sam's Cash Box—Matters at Philadelphia.

Balloon Illumination—Railroad Fares, etc.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, May 6, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL: —

Gotham is green with jealousy. Isn't she the biggest town, with the most money, rings, rows, elevated railways, and four-in-hands in America? And isn't that sleepy, rambling old village of Philadelphia stealing her birthright, and monopolizing the lion's share of the world's attention which would otherwise center on Manhattan Island? Of course; and under these circumstances how else should New York feel but injured and indignant? But we must submit to the inevitable with the best grace possible, and consent to suffer a partial eclipse for the next six months. And with this fact in view, I will notice only slightly the doings of the week here that more space may be left for the Quaker City.

In the first place the week has been one long moving day. The unsettled condition of rent, and of the pockets of most of the people has caused a very considerable amount of shifting round. This convulsion of nature, however, is about over now. The stream of drays full of stoves, looking-glasses, clocks, beds and chairs is subsiding, and our nomadic tribe is settling down with a sigh of relief for another year.

Mr. Charles O'Connor, who for several weeks has been made the subject of some very ugly stories accusing him of of very serious sharp practice in defrauding a widow who years ago was his client, has turned upon his slanderers, and before a tribunal presided over by ex-Governor Dix, has vindicated himself in a manner to increase, if possible, his high reputation.

Now that our sub treasury is handling so much specie, its guardians feeling naturally anxious for its security, have just put upon their two vaults a set of doors that will make the average "cracksman" scratch his head to get through. These doors are four in number, each four inches thick and made of welded iron and steel, the whole weighing some twenty-five tons, and, as though sixteen inches of cold metal were not enough to discourage the festive burglar, the doors have an aggregate of sixteen combination and chronometer locks. So on the whole, Uncle Sam may sleep pretty easy so far as his cash box here is concerned.

Two notable art sales have been held this week, one, that of the Blodgett collection of paintings netting nearly $80,000, and the other, that of the Jenkin's collection, bringing about $70,000. It is estimated that the private galleries of this city alone contain paintings to the value of at least two millions of dollars. One of the finest of its size in New York or in the country, is that of J. H. Johnston, the well known jeweler, of this city. His collection embraces many beautiful gems of the prominent modern painters, of E. Luetze, Cropsey, Bierstadt, the elder and younger Moran, Gay and numerous others, and one magnificent Rembrandt that shines among its modern associates like the Koh-i-noor among the lesser jewels of the crown. This admirable work, the subject of which is St. Mark and the Lion, caught the practiced eye of Mr. Johnston among a number of ordinary paintings in a picture store here here in New York, and was quietly bought by him at a nominal figure. Great was the surprise of his artist friends when called to view the new treasure, and much incredulity was at first expressed by them that such a treasure could have existed in their midst, but the proofs were too strong, and he is now generally conceded to be the possessor of a genuine Rembrandt worth at least $30,000. At Mr. Johnston's brilliant weekly receptions, when his collection is thrown open to invited guests, may be seen many of the most illustrious artists and literati of the country.

PHILADELPHIA, May 6th.

Hailing the conflict of opinion and authority between the Centennial Commission and the Executive Committee, to which I made reference in a previous letter, everything is smooth and harmonious as these last days of busy preparation; and even this little jarring is not as serious would have it appear. The subjects of recent action are the Sunday and liquor questions. The decision to close each building and grounds on Sunday, though sharply opposed, has been confirmed and will doubtless be the order of the season, to the great dissatisfaction of a large proportion of the natives. The authorities declining to act on the various protests received against liquor selling on the grounds, the public will have numberless opportunities to "prize" itself with in its sacred precincts.

Director Gasbora's "General Order No. 2," positively closes the buildings against the public from May 31 until the opening. This was rendered positive's necessary by the envious crowd who seriously interfered with the work. Even now to the uninitiated observer the main building is one great Babel of noise and confusion; in reality, however, the work is progressing orderly and rapidly. Since my last, much has been done toward the completion of the big international village which the main building contains. The entrance to the Chinese pavilion is completed, and is a fine specimen of what is aptly called the "tea caddy" style of architecture. On the front is an inscription in the zigzag lightning which delights a juvenile eye on the red paper of a bunch of fire crackers.

Speaking of which suggests the 4th of July, and that in turn reminds me that a Baltimore enthusiast has a plan for illuminating the city and grounds on the evening of that crowning festival—by means of big calcium lights suspended by balloons at a sufficient altitude. The idea may not be very practical, but the effect would be fine if it could be produced. The brilliant white light, hovering above the cradle of freedom, might well be taken for the star of a new and higher destiny of our country in the century to come. (There is no copyright on the foregoing.) Just how the moon would take this usurpation of her peculiar functions is quite another matter.

The Emperor and Empress of Brazil are expected to arrive here on Tuesday from the West, to be in readiness to attend the opening ceremonial on the following day. A suit of ten rooms on the first floor and one of four rooms on the third of the Continental Hotel are being prepared for their accommodation and that of their attendants. The first floor rooms are the same that were used by the Prince of Wales. They are to be newly and handsomely furnished and decorated.

The rehearsal of the music for the opening is progressing vigorously. The chorus now numbers nine hundred, and under the magnificent leadership of Theodore Thomas will be made to do wonders.

The "press gang" has already commenced to arrive, and will come faster and faster for several days yet. American journalism is going to have a magnificent representation, actively by the most of reporters and correspondents dictated to keep their respective papers posted during the Centennial, and at the same time show foreigners the workings of the reporting system, and passively, so to speak, by the "Newspaper Exhibition" which has a separate building and in which files of every American periodical will be kept. This exhibition of one of the most prominent and creditable features of our country, the lack of which would have been a national disgrace, was originated by and is entirely under the management of Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York, beyond question the most enterprising house of the kind in the world, and in fact the only one, probably, who could successfully carry out the plan.

The question of railroad fares, to and from Philadelphia, is naturally receiving much discussion and attention. It is probable that the reductions that will be made will generally be satisfactory, though some roads will doubtless try to make by while the sun shines, by hobbling prices and treating to the attractions of the Exposition to make the people pay them. The Pennsylvania Railroad has taken a noble initiative by putting their round trip tickets by excursion train, between New York and Philadelphia, at $5.00, a reduction of three-fifths. It is also issuing tickets from all parts of the country at proportionately low rates.

The number of strangers which the city and suburbs can now take away at one time is variously estimated. The transportation committee, after a pretty thorough canvass, reports the figures as 118,000, with a possibility at a pinch of taking care of 150,000. So come on, and don't be afraid of living to sleep in the streets.

RADIX.

A Message from President Grant to the National House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON, May 4.

The President to-day sent the following message to the House in reply to Representative Geo. Hoskins's resolution:

To the House of Representatives.—I have given very careful consideration to the resolution of Mr. Hoskins of Massachusetts, passed on the 3d of April, requesting the President of the United States to inform the House whether any Executive officers now, or during said 13 days, have been engaged in the practice of soliciting, directly or indirectly, in any way, the passage of any law, or any appropriation by law, by the said 13 days, or any part or portion thereof, and, if so, what officers have been so engaged, and information which the Constitution makes it the duty of the President to give, or which my judgment may suggest be for or against from either House may be asked by me may be useful in the discharge of the duties imposed upon me by the Constitution, and the powers granted to me by the Constitution and the authority given to me by the House of Representatives brought out Congress in which I received the legislative power of the Government to require of the Executive, an independent branch of the Government, unconnected with the senate and House of Representatives, an account of his discharge of its appropriations and legislative action and to call for his views as to what, where or how per formed. This power is a right, to be demanded by the Executive for information, is limited to what is necessary for the proper discharge by the Executive of legislative or of impeachment.

The information of the House as to whom the Executive acts, which the last session may have been performed, or for how long a time during the said 13 days, or any part or portion thereof, is not necessary to the House in the discharge of its legislative duties, and is not information which the Constitution makes it the duty of the President to give to the House, and is not information which my judgment suggests it would be for the public good to communicate to the House. It is not information which I have any right to withhold from the Senate or House of Representatives, when either House, in the discharge of its legislative duties, may require it.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, May 4, 1876.

It will be perceived that the message is dated Washington, without the usual addition of "Executive Mansion."

PRECEDENTS.

Accompanying the message is a memorandum of the absences of Presidents of the United States from the National Capital during a large month of the several Administrations, and of Cabinet officers during the Administration of Andrew Jackson, with particular reference to such absences. This memorandum contains the following: "Mr. Jefferson remained almost the entire first session of the Congress of his Administration at Monticello, and was absent from the seat of government during the whole of the second session. Mr. Obama remained during the greater part of the first session of the Congress of his Administration at Washington, and was absent from the seat of government during the whole of the second session.

Unclean Democratic Birds.

The field of Democratic investigation grows wider, and, as it grows wider, that Mr. Fitzhugh, notwithstanding the aristocratic flavor of his name, has been indicted for arson, that he has been indicted for perjury; that he has been indicted for an attempt to levy black mail and prevent a United States officer from discharging his duty; that his son was killed by a man whom he (Fitzhugh) was attempting to bent; and, lastly, that his own letters show him to be a man of unsound mind as well as bad morals. These charges are made by the Cincinnati Enquirer, a paper whose character has never been questioned or suspected.

Ellison, the Engineer of the House, is charged by McElhaney, Assistant Engineer Democrat, with stealing Government property, with irregularities in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and with attempting to procure a pardon in New York city. The latter charge, associated with the awful condition of the atmosphere of the House, is already making the Democratic members in the House uneasy lest there may be in the civilian some relative of the Hoegh family.

There are other subordinates of the House, for whom the Democratic party is responsible, resting under accusations of various kinds; but our list is long enough for all practical purposes—quite long enough, in fact, to show the depth of baseness and hypocrisy of Democratic professions of reform. Before we proceed to further comment, we yield to the Cincinnati Enquirer, whose Democracy, as we have said, is beyond question or suspicion. That paper says:

The simple fact is that the Democratic House, provided as Mr. L. H. Pitzhugh, the better it will be for them and for the country, if they would refer the matter to the bar; a large amount of incident remarks in the Democratic press, and in the same mind Mr. Pitzhugh's company. If the Democratic House is to be "a House of investigation," it should be a House of honest investigation, and not a House of Democratic investigation. Democracy is like an old coat, and has much patchwork received but filled him with a hope.

In the morning he gave his maid help in household matters, and then started for school. Little groups of children he met on the way, and one and another tried to chat with him of their childish sports, but he walked on with bent head, hardly answering when spoken to.

"What's the matter with Paddy Hall this morning?" asked one of the boys.

His sister says had gained that nickname for him among the boys.

"He's thinking how to make his father," declared another merry lane foot boy, as he splashed through a puddle.

Yes, that's just what I'm thinking," replied Paddy, but more that that he refused to say.

When he came home that afternoon he found his mother putting in a patch in Mary's dress.

Mother, I want to go down to the new hotel to live."

"Why, Benny?"

"Yes, mother, dear. I think I could earn a little money, and I'm old enough now to help you."

"But I want you to go to school. You never can be a useful man unless you are educated."

"Oh! I could study in the evening, and besides, mother, I want to begin to make my fortune now."

His mother looked up quickly to see whether her boy was really ambitious or not, but he seemed unconscious of the puzzling manner to persuade her to let him help. One glance in his face showed her his affection, but she could not bear to think of him giving up his study, so she feared he would have to do.

You had better stay and study, Benny, and when you are a man you can take care of me and make your fortune too."

"There's more than one road to fortune," replied Benny, and after consider able more talk it was decided that he should go down to the new hotel and see if he could get anything to do.

The Pavilion was situated in a glen about a mile from where Henry lived, and nearly eight miles from another hotel larger and more famous, though the scenery was fine in the glen. It would probably be merely a quiet resting place for weary passengers, and so Henry would arrange many of the steamboats he might meet in a larger place. The next morning, instead of going to school, he walked down to the Pavilion, and asked the proprietor if he did not want a boy.

"Yes. Do you know of some one?"

"I would like to come, sir."

"You are too small. How old are you?"

"Fourteen, sir, and I'm very strong." Henry stood up straight and firmly while the proprietor looked him over. His face showed his anxiety and disappointment, that Mr. Green was attracted to him.

What can you do?"

"I don't know, sir. I've always lived at home, but I'll try and do anything you want me to."

"Well, that is promising. Most boys would have said they could do anything. I'll try you a day. Go around into the kitchen and see if they want you."

Henry felt strange as he went into the new kitchen with its bright pans and many things which he had never seen, but he thought of his mother, and hastened by there was something to do, for the cook was taking great loaves of bread out of the oven and the table was full of other things, so she had no place to set them. Henry cleared a spot, emptied a pan of dirty water that stood by, and taking the knife some one had dropped, went on peeling the potatoes.

"Well, you're mighty handy!" exclaimed the cook as she covered the bread.

"I used to help mother sometimes," replied Henry.

"Are you the new boy"

"Yes, ma'am."

LITTLE MUSTACHES.

I suppose the whiskers have a right
As black as crow can be;
Who even heard so much an error
At the tender age of three?

The cunning upper lips must show,
In the gaslight, rich and red
That a dozen small fists with easy
At finding the hair so dead.

I guess that the little white fingers
Are modeled to do with the wood,
For their mother always remembers
To just the same as his hood.

I'll have to dispense with his kisses
Just while the fingers are grown,
For I'm scalded they are catching
And that wouldn't do, you know.

The dainty and dear little lassies
With dreadfully ambition be,
For whiskers are utterly classless
At the tenderage of three.

ONE ROAD TO FORTUNE.

"O, Father! help the widow and orphans! Then will not forget those who help her, and we need help for Thee!"

These were the words that Henry heard as he woke in the night, thinking it would only be beyond questions or suspicion. That paper says:

The simple fact is that the Democratic House, provided as Mr. L. H. Pitzhugh, the better it will be for them and for the country, if they would refer the matter to the bar; a large amount of incident remarks in the Democratic press, and in the same mind Mr. Pitzhugh's company. "Well, you're mighty handy!" exclaimed the cook as she covered the bread.

"I used to help mother sometimes," replied Henry.

"Are you the new boy"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Well, when the potatoes are ready, just set the tables, for I want Kate to help me."

Henry felt rather doubtful about the tables, but after Kate had shown him how to set one he managed the others nicely.

So the busy day went on, and when night came Henry went to Mr. Green to see whether he was to remain.

"I'll engage you now; we cannot get along without you. And, Henry, you must see to the gate."

The gate shut off a road which led from main with a great expense so that carriages could drive to the Cascade, and Henry was to collect the toll. He politely granted permission to go home and tell his mother his good fortune, and avoid his former censoriousness heard the news. They came over to see how Henry liked his new life.

"I shouldn't think you'd want to walk on other people all the time," said one.

"I don't know. I want to, and then I can. But there's somebody at the gate—I must go."

So it was, day after day. Henry was busy, and there, and everywhere; and when he was tired he thought of his mother who had worked for him so long, and he never was discouraged, for his mother had taught him to be cheerful and look on the bright side of things.

"I want a handy boy like you in my office. I will send you to a good school in the evening, and put you in the way of being a prosperous merchant when you are a man."

Henry took the gentleman to see his mother, and after much considering the matter it was decided.

"Your fortune is made, Henry," said Mr Green, when he saw him good-by.

"Then he has made it himself," said his good friend, "helping will what he found to do."

Henry's is not yet a man, but he is now three years older than he first started bravely to help his mother. He is gaining a good business education, has made himself useful to the employer, and is able to send money home every week, a comfort to the little family living there.—Sarah Conant, in the Methodist.

Who Was the Bad Boy?

LITTLE ANNIE was promptly dressed, and standing in front of the house waiting for her mother to go out for ride.

A nifty boy, dressed in coarse clothes, was passing, when the little girl said:

"Come here, boy, and take hands with me. I don't a boy like you, named Bobby."

The boy laughed, shook hands with her, and said:

"I've got a little girl just like you, only she hasn't any little cloak with pussy fur on it."

Here a lady came out of the door and said:

"Annie, you must not talk with bad boys on the street. I hope you haven't taken anything from her. Go right along, and never stop here again, boy."

That evening the boy was called down to speak with a boy in the hall. He was very much dressed, and stood with his cap in hand. It was the enemy of the morning.

"I came to tell you that I am not a bad boy," he said. "I go to Sunday-school, and help my mother all I can. I never tell lies, nor quarrel, nor say bad words; and I don't like a lady to call me names, and ask me if I have stolen her little girl's clothes off of her."

"Yes; I say so."

"Does he know the Commandments?"

"I'm afraid not very well."

"Can he say the Sermon on the Mount, and the Twenty-third Psalm, and the Golden Rule?"

"I am very much afraid he cannot," said the lady, laughing at the boy's bravery.

"Doesn't he ridicule his pony on Sunday instead of going to church?"

"I'm afraid he does, but he is cupid me," said the lady, blushing a little.

"Mother don't know I came here," said the bright little rogue, "but I thought I would just come around and see what kind of folks you were, and —and—I guess mother would rather your boy wouldn't come round our doors, because she don't like Mamie to talk to bad boys in the street. Good-by." And the little boy was gone.—Watchman.

Unnatural Parents.

UNNATURAL parents are not so rare as human nature would desire, but it is still rare to meet with such a couple of monsters as have just figured before the Mayence Assizes. M. Hacques and his wife had the charge of the estate at Laval. They had been married some years, and possessed four children—two girls, the elder, Maria, aged six, and two boys, Auguste and Gaston, aged respectively three and four. On the 24th of September last Hacques went to the Police Commissary, and said that some gypsies had robbed his money chest and stolen his two sons from the house during the absence of himself and wife in the fields. The gendarmes were at once on the track, but on the discovery of the chest, abundant evidence was found that the children had been murdered. Under the influence of this strong evidence the husband and wife broke down and this fresh grave, in consequence more than a foot deep, was found. When the body was reached it lay on a bed of straw, and was covered with a sheet, and the head was surrounded by a handkerchief. The little boy's throat was cut, and the body was pierced in many places with a knife. The little girl was strangled. The parents, it appears, had murdered their children in order to get the insurance money, which they had paid to them. The jury found them guilty, but with extenuating circumstances, and they were sentenced to twenty years' hard labor.

The Quality of the Blood.

Upon the quality of the blood depends, in a great measure, the healthy action of the body. If the blood is wanting in nutritious properties, the muscles are sure to become soft and flabby, the flesh deficient in firmness, the digestive powers weak, the cheeks hollow and the eyes dull. On the other hand, the quality of the blood, stimulates digestion and assimilation, and thus promotes healthy nutrition. Under the influence of this strength-giving principle the body becomes plump and the flesh grows in consequence more firm and solid. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, prepared from the blood is tinged with a healthful color, and the skin assumes its brilliancy. The Bitters also freshen the blood from impurities by regulating the liver, which is the organ charged with the duty of carrying off the bile, and thus preventing it from being absorbed into the blood. The Bitters are entirely vegetable, and may be safely taken by persons of the most delicate constitution. They are also a certain remedy for fever and ague, dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness, kidney complaint, rheumatism, and nervousness.

Unconstitutional in the United States.

The report of the Committee on Incendiarism, recently presented to the National Board of Fire Underwriters, is a very able paper. It shows that during the past year nearly five per cent of the number of fires occurred in the United States, while nearly fifty-five per cent of the property destroyed was lost by the same cause. The report also contains the offering of rewards for the arrest and conviction of incendiaries. Fires for the year 1875 numbered 9,000, and were classified as follows: Defects, 586; matches, 214; spontaneous, 109; accidental, 317; carelessness, 237; unknown, 1,000; incendiary, 661; unexplained, 5,000; total, 9,000. Defective flues and foul chimneys cause daily fires.

The report of the Committee on Fire Department Statistics, to which the paper principally recommended the establishment of fire patrols in every city, and that they should be fairly sustained and supported by the citizens where they are located. New York city has not got sufficient water supply for its protection in case of emergency. Chicago was provided with having the best Fire Department.

Henry's is not yet a man, but he is now three years older than he first started bravely to help his mother. He is gaining a good business education, has made himself useful to the employer, and is able to send money home every week, a comfort to the little family living there.—Sarah Conant, in the Methodist.

Who Was the Bad Boy?

LITTLE ANNIE was promptly dressed, and standing in front of the house waiting for her mother to go out for ride.

A nifty boy, dressed in coarse clothes, was passing, when the little girl said:

"Come here, boy, and take hands with me. I don't a boy like you, named Bobby."

The boy laughed, shook hands with her, and said:

"I've got a little girl just like you, only she hasn't any little cloak with pussy fur on it."

Here a lady came out of the door and said:

"Annie, you must not talk with bad boys on the street. I hope you haven't taken anything from her. Go right along, and never stop here again, boy."

That evening the boy was called down to speak with a boy in the hall. He was very much dressed, and stood with his cap in hand. It was the enemy of the morning.

"I came to tell you that I am not a bad boy," he said. "I go to Sunday-school, and help my mother all I can. I never tell lies, nor quarrel, nor say bad words; and I don't like a lady to call me names, and ask me if I have stolen her little girl's clothes off of her."

"Yes; I say so."

"Does he know the Commandments?"

"I'm afraid not very well."

"Can he say the Sermon on the Mount, and the Twenty-third Psalm, and the Golden Rule?"

"I am very much afraid he cannot," said the lady, laughing at the boy's bravery.

"Doesn't he ridicule his pony on Sunday instead of going to church?"

"I'm afraid he does, but he is cupid me," said the lady, blushing a little.

"Mother don't know I came here," said the bright little rogue, "but I thought I would just come around and see what kind of folks you were, and —and—I guess mother would rather your boy wouldn't come round our doors, because she don't like Mamie to talk to bad boys in the street. Good-by." And the little boy was gone.—Watchman.

FRENCH BOILS.—Two quarts of sifted flour, a lump of lard about the size of an egg, one a little larger of butter; stir in the flour, the same size in making pastry. When well stirred, add blood warm water, or preferably milk and water; add a little salt, half a teacupful of home-made yeast, or three tablespoonfuls of baker's yeast. Mix up the evening as for bread and let rise; ten or fifteen minutes will suffice if the oven is sufficiently heated. Good bread is made in the same way with a proportionately small quantity of lard and butter.

THE Mining Journal says that one of the strongest arguments raised against the Channel Tunnel scheme is the length of time it will take to execute; but, if we are to believe the Liberte, this objection has now disappeared. In fact, according to that paper, the tunnel can be completed in less than six months! It tells us that a machine has just been invented by which fifty-five meters of ground may be passed through per diem, and it explains if both the English and the French begin piercing at the same time the tunnel can be efficient in 140 days.

The Superstitious Beliefs of the Kirghiz.

M. D. CONWAY writes to the Cincinnati Commercial that Dr. Eugene Schuyler, Secretary of the United States Legation at St. Petersburg, was recently in London, having come there to receive the gold medal of his work on Turkistan before proceeding to his duties at Constantinople. From advance sheets left in his possession, Mr. Conway sends the following extracts giving an account of the curious superstitious notions and customs of the people of Turkistan:

"During the few days I passed in this garden I learned many proprieties as well as many superstitions of Mussulman life. For instance I was shown how to cut a melon. According to the Koran, when an animal is killed for food, its throat must be cut in order that the blood may all run out. By transfer of ideas the melon is treated in the same way. First, its throat is cut—a small incision is made in the end farthest from the stem; then its head is cut off by slicing off a small piece; after that it is cut up lengthways, and with one or two decisive strokes of the knife the flesh is removed from the rind and cut into thin, small slices, which are pushed out sideways by the knife and unsteady skin. The flesh has left her cheeks and her cheeks her lips. The once sparkling, dazzling eyes are now dull and expressionless. The once scarce, dimpled hands are grow thin and cold. Her vanity has fled. What has brought this wondrous change? What is the cause of this sudden blight on the surface of that once lovely form? Does she suffer from consumption? Is she aware of the awful appearances she makes? Has she been poisoned? Has she consulted the catalogue of drugs as from which men in search of health? Many of these maladies, and others, are acquired, but the most frequent cause of female Diseases, if properly questioned, will be found to be Leucorrhœa, and thereby prone of short duration. They are a local affection, and can be cured by a few days' use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which is without a rival. No other medicine for women can show the People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," of 1,008 pages, sent for the price of $1.50. It, in the author and publisher, is an evil-doer, for it tells how to avoid disease, and thereby prove Belknap's motion for a postponement of his trial was denied. It is said the vote was unanimous. The prosecution of the managers, after the motion to go on with the case was, in effect, to go on with the hearing, take all the testimony, and then decide both questions of jurisdiction and guilt at the close.

The impression prevails in Washington that the Senate will decide that it has no jurisdiction to try impeachments over a person who is not in office and was not in office at the time the proceedings were commenced against him, and will therefore dismiss the impeachment case against Belknap. In that case Clymer's entire track by which he got Belknap out of office before commencing the impeachment will be exposed. It is reported that Gen. Belknap himself says he hopes for Senate action, as he is that it has grounds on which he can successfully defend himself. It is said that if Belknap is not tried by the Senate he will still be tried, by the courts, under an indictment already found.

Mr Blaine has made answer, and it says a final, personal explanation. He was charged with having been connected in the Kansas Pacific Railroad bond frauds of that road in consideration for services in Congress. It appears that in rendered the Company no service, and that he joined against subsidies sought in its aid, and never had any interest in or bonds. The story grew out of the fact that his brother, John R Blaine, had, and perhaps still has, some of the bonds. His interest there has been, however, to a time before James G Blaine was ever a candidate for Congress Thompson to the ground another scandal, leaving the accused unscathed.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the low ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers in health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative, as well as Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a large Hospital practice, where he had ample opportunity for testing the various remedies, separately and combined, of the age, and the result was crowned in presenting to the world the fruit of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable Extracts, the power of which in removing disease is unequaled in the annals of Medicine.

His Discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Magnetism, Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of diseases, stamps it as the greatest Discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains for the system to act upon, to relieve pain, and in the great majority of cases, to entirely remove the cause of the disease. In proof of this we point to the thousands of living witnesses in the United States, every one of whom will testify to the truth of the statement.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every part of the human frame; every bone and muscle, sinew, nerve, tissue, membrane, gland, and vital organ of the body, and sending healing balm to the diseased part, it causes a reaction, and restores it to a healthy condition.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients so near the grave that the most powerful physical organs of the body, and a life-giving principle is gained. Instances of such has frequently been the case in Intermittent Fever.

No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism the Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, Piles will disappear in three days from the use of this remedy, three ounces.

For Nervous Diseases this invaluable is unknown.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Insomnia, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Sore in the Face or Nose, Burns, Scald Head, Sciatica, Sore Breast, Freckles, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Scrofula, Felon or Imposthume, Chilblains, Sore Feet, Tetter, Magnetic Ointment.

THE NEWS.

The Dublin University boat clubs have decided to organize a joint representative crew to take part in the Philadelphia contest.

The college and library at Charlottesville, Fluence, were burned on the 26th. Loss about $250,000

The Russki Mir, of a late date, says 30,000 Turcomans recently assembled at Merv and resolved to submit help from Afghanistan to prosecute a holy war against Russia.

An explosion took place on the evening of the 6th in the magazine of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Great Western Railroad Company, in which was stored the giant powder used in excavating the great tunnel now being blasting in the Bergen tunnel, near Jersey city. Every building within a radius of two miles was more or less injured. One person was killed, and the loss to property exceeded $50,000.

About 5 o'clock on the afternoon of the 6th a heavy wagon containing a tunnel, accompanied with heavy rain, peals of thunder and flashes of lightning. The tempest continued a few minutes only, but during that time over a quarter of a million dollars damage was wrought. The Cook County Hospital was stripped of its roof, the Michigan Southern Freight Depot, said to be the largest in the world, was leveled to the ground, and the workmen therein employed nearly buried under the debris. Five men were seriously, and one or two, it was thought, fatally injured. A child was killed by the falling over of a lamp on Blue Island avenue, and four girls were injured by the falling in of a chimney on Franklin street. Several of the churches on Wabash avenue were injured, notably, Grace Church, whose spire was hauled to the ground and broken into innumerable fragments. Trees were uprooted, fences torn down and sidewalks scattered. The shipping in the harbor was badly injured, though no loss of life had been reported up to the morning of the 8th. The crib, standing in the lake, two miles from the city, the lake terminus of the tunnel which supplies Chicago with water, was struck by lightning, and the roof and a portion of the superstructure carried away. The keeper was injured somewhat, although not seriously. The damage caused by the storm was variously estimated at from $250,000 to $500,000, but it is conservatively thought the same storm culminated at half past three in the morning, and was very violent. Several large brick buildings were thrown down. The damage to property in the city and county was estimated at from $450,000 to $500,000. Other places in the city and county were also severely injured, but the insurance on all buildings will cover a large number of these losses.

Berlin dispatches of the 9th say it was generally believed that the Sobranje at last would prove fatal to Turkey, and that the interference of European powers to protect the Christians was unavoidable, since it had been demonstrated that the Porte was powerless to protect even the Consuls against the outbreaks of fanaticism. Germany, Russia, Austrian, French and English men-of-war had been ordered to Salonika.

A despatch from Rio Grande City, Texas, of the 9th, says that Ring, the leader of the revolutionary forces in Mexico, was retreating to Matamoras, owing to the scarcity of water.

Anna Dickinson made her debut on the dramatic stage in Boston on the evening of the 8th, before a large audience. The play was "A Crown of Thorns," her own production.

P. N. Rubenstein, under sentence of death for the murder, last winter, of Sarah Goldstein, and in his evidence during the break-up (N. Y.) Jail on the morning of the 9th

Miss Ada C. Sweet, Pension Agent at Chicago, appeared before the Civil Service Commission at Washington on the 9th, and stated that, in consideration of receiving the appointment to the office which she holds she had agreed to pay David Blakely, her predecessor, $2,000, and was directed by him to pay the money over to Lemuel States Woodruff, H. H. Campbell, Washington lobby-ist, and Blakely himself. Miss Blakely and Campbell filed the bond performed her part of the contract, but Campbell told her that was not correct; that he had paid a portion of the bond for $5,000, and she was to pay the whole of that sum. When Mr Blakely turned the office over to Miss Sweet, she says, he turned over to her $37,000, and induced her to give him a receipt for $40,000, to cover up a deficit of $3,000, promising to make it all right in a few weeks, but failed to do so. After ward Commissioner Blakely and Blakely came into her office and demanded that the $2,000 deficit be paid at once, and charged it upon her as her own deficit. She went to Mr Campbell, and between them the amount was raised. Mr Baker knew of the arrangement she had made with Mr Blakeley. When the President found she was paying off money for her appointment, he notified her the 9 commissions of it would be a sufficient cause for her removal. She had received no benefit from her appointment as Pension Agent, but had run into debt and was still behind about $2,000.

Loss to-day (Saturday) in the morning of the 11th say intelligence had just reached there of the breaking out of a new insurrection against Turkish rule in Bulgaria. The insurgents are said to be well armed, and the same storm culminated at half past three in the morning, and was very violent. Several large brick buildings were thrown down. The damage to property in the city and county was estimated at from $450,000 to $500,000. Other places in the city and county were also severely injured, but the insurance on all buildings will cover a large number of these losses. OUR RADIX LETTER.

Offenbach--Susan B. Anthony--Beecher Again.

Subterranean Telegraph - The Bergen Explosion.

The Opening Ceremonies -- At the Centinils, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, May 12, 1876

EDITOR SENTINEL:

If our friends Messrs. Moody & Sankey, on the evening of the 11th inst. should have stepped into the Hippodrome, where for months they wrestled with the colorists of Satan, they would probably have pronounced its off to New York as hopelessly given over to the world, the flesh, and the other Demon. Fountains flowers, green turf, statues, and twelve thousand guilty dressed people welcomed the famed composer, Jacques Offenbach, on his first appearance in this country. The occasion was also the opening of the Summer Season at this famous resort. The concert was fine, but lack of space forbids description. I must add, however, that the illustrious attraction of the evening received $3,000 per night for his appearance, which I calculate to be $200 for each time he scratched the conductor's stand, or at least $4 for every wave of his white gloved hand during the whole evening. Pretty well for hard times.

The town has been considerably amused by the proceedings of the National and New York State Woman Suffrage Associations, in session conjointly assembled at Masonic Hall. The irrepressible Susan B. of course, figures conspicuously in both gatherings, and the same leading members appear to each to ventilate their grievances. At the National Convention a platform was adopted demanding political recognition for women, protesting against the mastery of man and against calling the present Centennial celebration a celebration of the independence of the people of the United States, and rejoicing in all resistance to taxation without representation. In conclusion, the women of the United States were requested to meet in their respective towns and districts on July 4, and "declare themselves free and independent, no longer bound to obey laws in whose making they have no voice, and in the presence of the assembled nations of the world, gathered on this soil to celebrate our national Centenial, to demand justice for the women of this land."

The State Association, among other terrifying resolutions, passed the following, which, doubtless, will produce a profound sensation "Resolved that the proposition of our French friends to erect a statue of Liberty on Bedloe's Island, in New York Harbor, points afresh to the cruelty of woman's present position, since it is proposed to represent Freedom as a majestic Female form in a State where not one woman is free."

Let us indulge the hope that the Centennial Exhibition will not prove an utter failure, from having incurred the displasure of of these gentle reformers, and that La Belle France will survive the dreadful charge of having enhanced the "cruelty of woman's present position."

The latest phase of the Beecher scandal excites much comment, and the quillines are on the qui vive for further developments. The question of expelling Mr. H. C. Bowen from Plymouth Church is under discussion, and has caused some very lively passages at arms between the contending factions. Final action upon the motion is postponed until the evening of Thursday, the 18th inst. Meanwhile Mr. Bowen proposes to tell Mr. Beecher, in the presence of a third party, all he knows derogatory to the character of the Plymouth divine, said third party to be bound to strict secrecy. Dr. Min. M. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle, has been selected as the mute witness, and there seems a probability that Mr. Beecher will at last get at the "bottom facts." How much he may subsequently disclose is, as they used to say in California, a case of quien sabe.

The Western Union Telegraph Company have contracted for the construction of the pneumatical system of mail. A mortar trench, three feet deep, is dug in the street, and the wires are enclosed in brass tubes. For the present, two lines of pipes will be laid from the Company's office (through Broadway and Wall street to Broad street, and two through Maiden Lane to Pearl street, and thence to the Cotton Exchange. The general adoption of this system of mail is to be desired, as it would rid our streets of the quagmire pest which now obstructs locomotion.

PHILADELPHIA, May 14th.

Well, that big gathering upon the banks of the Schuylkill has come to a head at last, and has been reported and a grand affair it was in some of its completeness, unlimited generals and age el deal of unsightly rubbish. The sun of the previous day and night, besides making a sort of that hazy pall thing of the town, and the country contiguous, continued into the next morning and threw out the expectant million such a soup-emerging as opening of the big show. Shortly after the time set for the commencement of the universal ceremonies "Old Pop" arrived, however, and the other young people brightened up the scene immensely.

The opening ceremonies did take place, and all of those other scenes are true, as I said last sentence from Some 50,000 guests were present. The music was inspiring. The speeches and received their President in earnest and enthusiastic as a "dead" girl sweetheart, and Dom Pedro jolly and popular. Large bodies always serve society, and so, of course, the opening of the Show had not been a long lady to wait long for in the after noon when the doors of the main building swung open, and the eager, living mass of impatient humanity which had been accumulating for several hours was permitted to crowd and struggle and squirm and elbow itself into the edifice, and spread itself over the vast area to see and admire and wonder to its heart's content.

In the wilderness of visible elegance in every imaginable manufacture which the main building contains it is difficult to pick out for special mention any single article. There is one class, however, which, containing the quite ruled almost all other exhibits, is sufficiently salient to attract attention. This class is Pianos of which the show is very extensive and complete. It is a notable fact that many fine American manufacturers are represented. At Paris and Vienna the American makers exhibited and bore off the palm, but now the foreigners do not display the same confidence in their powers. The finest instrument of the whole array is a magnificent concert grand of Albert Weber, New York. Which is probably the finest piano ever made. The Style is entirely novel, and the design and mayhap deity competition. Swelling on a piano's corner, among a number of Mr. Weber's elegant instruments, it elicits a volume of admiration from the constantly changing crowd that surrounds it. Mr. Weber is a living embodiment of New York pluck and energy. In spite of back knock and enormous competition, he has fought his way single handed to a foremost position among the standard makers of Europe and America, and his pianos are sung by thousands of as beautiful instruments as look upon spheres. He was one of the first to improve and perfect the upright piano so as to make it a prominent success.

Professor Tyndall in the foreign trade of the country has been made under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce, and shows a remarkable increase in the value of imports and exports, the latter being heavily in our favor. The imports for last year, $365,860,000, are against $324,641,901, for 1875, and the exports $660,000,000, against $590,000,000 in 1875.—In three years, in other words, we have taken off our own backs and put into our pockets $470,000,000 more than we have spent for foreign goods. This is enormous, and $470,000,000 saved is $470,000,000 earned. The amount of exports this year, is therefore $82,000,000, against $42,000,000 last year.

Mark Twain as an Indian Fighter.

Mr. Mark Twain has now a thrilling story to narrate of his first experience with Indians, since the Indian war broke out. Mr. Clemens, since the Custer fight, has been following up small parties entered in Tuolumne county, but nothing of much interest, however, that the story would not be taken as an evidence of Mr. Twain's courage. The story is "sworn" to by Mr. Clemens himself, and he carried remark of the occurrence, on everybody's name in the Territories, who was not Mr. Twain's own "dear personal." "What's in a name?" asked Sam. "Nothing pictured by a name unless, of course, it be water, or milk." And Mr. Twain would have been in no name, but rushed away to alarm others and Mount and Jim under their feet to Tuolumne where they found a great crowd of miners assembled and ready to march on the foe. Mark was appointed to the command of a company, and in due course of time the little band was on the march. The Stanislaus River having been reached just to drink, it was thought advisable to proceed with more caution, as the enemy was supposed to be encamped in that vicinity. The different companies separated, and spreading out in a semi-circle, marched up the river, Mark's company, consisting of ten men, were plodding along in the gathering gloom, when suddenly was heard at no great distance on the bushes.

"Halt!" commanded Mark. The company halted.

"Gentlemen, this is no time for tied ing. Tattletown expels every man to the bin duty. The enemy is before us. You will form into a hollow square. To the rear open order, and as the first lot seems to be open, it is in order for every man to proceed in that direction to act orderly a manner as possible. As I am here myself, I think I will commence the first reconnoissement first. March."

As the rumor of the approach of the bloodthirsty red scum was afterward prone to be a false alarm, this movement on the part of Mark's division was not noticed at the time, although freely this ensued afterward in Tattletown, and the explanation given that Mark was frightened by the explosion of a belated bunter's gun.—*Sonora (Cal.) An Author's Annoyances.

Tim poet Longfellow, although natured to a most unfathomable depth, is annoyed by under the assaults made upon his time and his privacy by simple-curiosity and literary fun hunters who have no possible claim upon him, and the little short of a saint if he were not sometimes annoyed by the pertinacity of unmitted gu-ts. Take the illustration we now notarize:

Three ladies, two from Chicago and one from Milwaukee entirely unknown to the poet, sent in their cards. Three are consequently received by him in a reception room. Would he be good enough to let them see his library? The request is so pleased in and the library undergoes inspection

"Oh, it's lovely," "sweet," "nice," and now "cozy" as see the dining room?"

The wish for dinner was laid and the hour for that meal close at hand, but mere artlebess the ladies carried their point, being when it came to seeking to be shown out, one, the host who help before, re-ceived to collar or attic.

Another amusing instance, also related to us by a friend, was that of an English man who, like our Charles Coldstream, had "traveled everywhere, seen everything, and done everything" and yet was keenly ennuied.

"Have you, Mr. Longfellow, thought I could to see the great American poet, 'a' sum in ma cash?"

The poet asked the visitor to be seated, who he resumed:

"Yes, see Mr. Longfellow: I've been great traveler, sir, been all over the Continent, been in Ireland, Sweden, Norway—"

"Indeed, you must have found much to interest you."

"Well, something, but it's getting to be an awful bore. I've just come from Egypt, old country—antiquities, you know."

"Yes," replied the poet; "many interesting remains of past ages."

"Ah, yes—just so, exactly, heaps of old ruins. I like ruins. Now, everything's new here in America, you know—can't find shy old Rome—as thought I'd come and see you."—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

A School Girl Elopes With Her Roommate's Betrothed.

Among the young people of the best cities of Bibtod, "Bessie" Cockton, aged sixteen, adopted daughter of Jerome Cockton, a rich farmer, was an acknowledged leader. She recently returned home from a Philadelphia boarding-school, where she had been a pupil for four years, making occasional visits home. On one of these visits, about a year ago, she met Alva Evans, the son of an iron founder, of London, Canada. He was visiting this section with a party of other young men for the purpose of hunting. Young Evans fell in love with Miss Cockton The result was that a correspondence was opened and kept up between the two such a most tragic kind upon, to be continuanced when Miss "Bessie" should have reached the age of eighteen.

The romance and "particular friend" of the young lady at school was Frances Peters, of Petersville, N. Y. She was two years the senior of "Bessie," and left school some time before the latter. Miss Peters is a blonde, exceedingly attractive, and of a dashing and reckless nature At the house of a friend in Philadelphia she met Jesse Bell, a young man representing to be of an old family and wealthy. The young people formed an attachment for each other, and Miss Peters left school deeply in love with Bell. As her parents had other matrimonial prospects marked out for her at home, she kept her engagement with the young Bell a secret from them, but, it seems, promised to marry him at some future day. Not being able to leave school at that time, Miss Peters made arrangement with Miss Cockton, by which she was to pay the latter a visit, when Mr Bell was to go also and stay a few days. To add to the completeness of the arrangement, "Bessie" wrote to her Canadian betrothed, and he was to join the visiting party.

Miss Peters came to Eldred about the middle of April, and in a few days there after Jesse Bell made his appearance, and Miss "Bessie" liked him from the first. It was then the latter part of April before Mr Evans came from Canada. During the time Bell remained in Eldred after the coming of Mr Bell, Miss Cockton had transferred her affections to her friend's betrothed, and by his friend Bell had actually grown cold. It did not take the jealous eyes of Miss Peters and the second Canadian long to ascertain the change, and it affected them respectively. The last had no idea that it was anything more than a temporary flirtation. On the afternoon of young St. Evans' departure for a May-day party for an excursion to the mountains. On Wednesday morning the party started, in accordance with previous arrangements. Miss Cockton and Mr. Evans in one carriage and the visiting couple in another. On reaching the Evans's family took the matter very calmly. Miss Peters, however, was found lying in her bed, about seven o'clock the same evening, covered with blood. With a small penknife she had severed the large arteries of both arms, and was nearly unconscious from loss of blood. But by the timely discovery of her situation she would soon have been past all aid. Her wounds were bound up, and a doctor summoned, who now has her in charge. Her parents were sent for and arrived here this morning. They will remove their unfortunate daughter to her home as soon as they can with safety.

"Bessie" Cockton has a remarkable history. She was found, in the summer of 1865, on the doorstep of Farmer Cockton's house, in a basket. Accompanying the infant was a note to the effect that the mother of the child was a gipsy girl, but been "converted to Christ and caused bear the thought of this innocent creature growing in ignorance and vice. In there fore, it here? Its little wings are weary, and, like the dear Jesus, it has no place to lay its head. Tear it not away, but keep it, for the love of Christ."

The child was a bright little thing, and as the farmer had no children he and his wife concluded to adopt it as their own. It came to such a condition in the home that they gave it the name of "Blessing," which was subsequently turned into "Bessie."—Elmird (Pa.) Star N. Y. Herald.

The "Said Boy."

"This said boy," began Bijah, as he led out a youth of thirteen, "did, to-wit, and to-wit, throw a stone and smash a pane of glass on Howard street, all of which he says he will never do again."

"Punishing glass, eh?" queried the court. "Well, the law will have to punish him, I'm afraid."

"I haven't got any child!" whispered the prisoner, a little his chin quivered and his cheek knocked together.

"What's the matter with you?" asked Bijah, a young man representing to be of an old family and wealthy. The young people formed an attachment for each other, and Miss Peters left school deeply in love with Bell. As her parents had other matrimonial prospects marked out for her at home, she kept her engagement a secret from them, but, it seems, promised to marry him at some future day. Not being able to leave school at that time, Miss Peters made arrangement with Miss Cockton, by which she was to pay the latter a visit, when Mr Bell was to go also and stay a few days. To add to the completeness of the arrangement, "Bessie" wrote to her Canadian betrothed, and he was to join the visiting party.

"I was only throwing at a roller bird," protested the prisoner, his right eye also filling up.

"That makes the offense ten times worse," shouted the court. "When you want to hurt a yellowbird, or red-bird, or any other kind of bird for 'You ought to be shot up in a square package, labeled 'A bad boy,' and placed on a shelf in the lowest room of the cellar!"

"I can't go—cannot leave to take care of a horse!" was the boy's very solemn answer.

Re-doing over the warrant again. His Honor continued:

"Boy, be careful! If you could see your face in the town you'd miss half a dozen glasses and all the ferry boat excursions. You'll sigh for home when the sun rises, and you'll keep and longer when a May-day party for an excursion to the mountains. On Wednesday morning the party started, in accordance with previous arrangements. Miss Cockton and Mr. Evans in one carriage and the visiting couple in another. On reaching the Evans's family took the matter very calmly. Miss Peters, however, was found lying in her bed, about seven o'clock the same evening, covered with blood. A Murderer's Confession.

BOSTON, Mass.

None of the mysterious and awful murders which have brought our city into notice in late years has created such an excitement as was produced by the confession of Thomas W. Piper, made public today. Enforced abstinence from rum and opium has been breaking him down so that the jailers are already beginning to fear that he will never live to mount the gallows.

His failing health was shown first by his acknowledgment that he knew of Mabel's death, but that it was the result of accident; later by the writing of a long letter to his mother, and, yesterday, by his confession of the crime for which he is to die, together with two others which have baffled the best efforts of the police.

Piper confessed in the first place to the murder of Mabel Young, of which he stood convicted, saying that he had left a dress at all day. to kill somebody, and had taken a lot up into the belfry with which to do it. He said he wait for a girl about twelve years old, and that this was the girl, at her request, he went up with her. He killed her by striking her two blows upon her head with the hat.

He also confessed that he was the murderer of Bridget Bandregan, which crime was committed in the year 1873, and for which he was once arrested and after wards discharged. The evening on which he murdered her he was possessed with the same desire to kill, and he proved himself to be about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and went to bed.

He also confessed to the assault on Mary Tyner in July, 1874, for which he had never been suspected. He was in her room at night, and, after choking the girl into insensibility with the desire to kill her, and he accordingly had her upon the bed, and left her for dead, escaping through an open window.

The date of Piper's execution is fixed for May 26. There is little doubt about the result of the sentence, as, except in the two murders, but some farewell is thrown upon the other deeds by the detectives, who think his object may be to escape death so far as it comes and irresponsible. The public, however, demands his execution, and there is no hope for Executive clemency.

A Good Idea Illustrated.

Barnes, the schoolmaster in a unhappy town in Dorsetshire, England, thought that boys could be taught history better than in any other way by letting each boy in the class — a king and some leading character and retell the acts of that character as if he had done them himself. This struck Barnes as a mighty good idea, and he adopted it. He found that the boys had been progressed so far in its study of the history of Rome as the Punic wars, and Mr. Barnes immediately set to work to make these portentous Romans and Carthaginians, and certain of the other flesh-and-blood characters which fill history in the latter would be studied as it always had been, and he wrote a note to The Entertainment Monthly to say that in his opinion the man who suggested the new system ought to be led out and shot. The boys do not now take as much interest in Roman history as they did on that day.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Tutelage of the Young Emperor of China.

Sir Thomas as there must be hereditary rulers the education of very young Princes, who are to be called one day to govern large countries, is a matter of no trifling importance, not only to those countries, but to the world in general. So evidently, think those almond-eyed dames of Peking, the two Empresses, who are the regents of China. It seems that the embryo Emperor, who has arrived at the mature age of four years, has been placed under the tutelage of two grave and reverend seigneurs of the imperial court. So momentous an event was considered deserving of an edict full of the most fine fly language addressed to the Chinese millions, who were summoned to be happy until grateful because the youthful brother of the sun and moon was about to begin his A B C's. It must be confessed that to enter upon the attempt to learn the Chinese alphabet is an undertaking worthy of celebration, since he who should achieve this would be entitled to a place in the Academy. However, all China thrilled with joy to learn that the "Imperial Court of Astronomers" had selected a most auspicious day for putting of the Emperor's sandals, that the great Dragon China had taken the august pupil in charge, and that the Empresses Regent would shortly begin to guide the sweet boy's plastic fingers of his uncle tongue. Two letters also of purple ink, three names, like those of Roman princes, and many mottoes, and every morning and evening they are crammed to impress upon him sage and salutary counsels respecting his conduct in life.

But will these tutors prove to be the sacred person of the nephew of the Immortal gods and goddesses of the golden or the silver age? Indeed, they are doing the best they can, and the tenderness of the child's Happily, the ministers of this most interesting are quite equal to this function. The pupil, as the Emperor is named, indeed, be violated by the pedagogic bamboos; nor yet must his faults, his neglect of lessons, and his other rebellious tendencies, go unpunished. A plan somewhat similar to that adopted by Lord Shaftesbury, who, it will be remembered, when the penalty of his pupil's faults fell on the unfortunate person of the butler Hoxey, has been described upon. The office of "whipping boy" has been established; an unfortunate little Chinaman, almost the age of the imperial pupil, has been appointed, in more than one sense, to the pain—and he is the boy will undergo the punishment of his fellow's misdemeanors. Those who are tempted to laugh at this idea must remember that it is probable that after all, schemes not dissimilar are sometimes used among more civilized people to transfer their punishments from the shoulders of their rightful owners.—Japanese Journal.

Management of Lawns.

Thomas McCamm, landscape gardener of Hartford, Conn., says of the management of lawns in America, that

1. The grim climatical American institutes a deeper and richer soil than England, to which the grass is accustomed, and which is signed to be fed to a horse at one time, be mingled with a limited of cut straw, the animal will of the ability to consume much bulk in order to obtain the desired nourishment. Some writer, who has examined critically the stomachs of a horse, states that a stomach of a horse will hold about nine bus a capacity of only about sixteen gluats, while that of the ox has two hundred gluts; in the latter case the proportion is reversed, the horse having a capacity of one hundred and twenty quarts, against one hundred of the ox. The ox and most other animals have a gall bladder for the retention of a part of the bile secreted in the intervals of digestion; the horse has none, and the bile flows directly into the intestine as fast as secreted. This construction of the digestive apparatus indicates that the horse was formed to eat slowly and digest continuously, bulky and innutritious food When fed on hay it passes very rapidly through the stomach and intestines. The horse can eat but about five pounds of hay in an hour, which he hardened during mastication with not times its weight of saliva. Now the stomach, to digest well, will contain but about ten quarts, and when the animal eats one-third of his daily ration, or seven pounds, in one and one-half hours, he has swallowed at least two stomachfills of hay and saliva, one of these having passed into the intestine. Observation has shown that the food is passed to the intestine by the stomach in the order in which it is received. If we feed a horse six quarts of oats it will pass about fifth his stomach, and, if, as soon as he finishes this, we feed him the above ration of seven pounds of hay, he will eat sufficient in three-quarters of an hour to have forced the oats entirely out of his stomach into the intestine. As it is the office of the stomach to digest the nitrogenous parts of the food, and as a stomach full of oats contains four or five times as much of these as the same amount of hay, it is certain that either the stomach must separate the gastric juice five times as fast, which is hardly possible, or it must retain the food five times as long. By feeding the oat first it can only be retained long enough for the proper digestion of hay; consequently it seems legal out, when feeding a concentrated food like oats with a bulky one like hay, to feed the latter first.—N. Y. Herald.

The Small Capacity of a Horse's Stomach.

A horse requires food in a much more concentrated form than most cattle, and always has. The ox will eat and digest as much grass in a day as a horse will in two days, and will live a healthful life upon it, while the horse will soon die of inflammation of the bowels or some other disease, if compelled to subsist upon grass alone. The ox and most other animals have a gall bladder for the retention of a part of the bile secreted in the intervals of digestion; the horse has none, and the bile flows directly into the intestine as fast as secreted. This construction of the digestive apparatus indicates that the horse was formed to eat slowly and digest continuously, bulky and innutritious food When fed on hay it passes very rapidly through the stomach and intestines. The horse can eat but about five pounds of hay in an hour, which he hardened during mastication with not times its weight of saliva. The Lily Family.

The number of Lillyworts is large. embracing somewhere near 1,500 different species the greater part of which are trees of temperate climates. It includes many of the most beautiful exotics in our gardens and greenhouses. The gaudy Tulips which decorate our borders in spring time, the stately Crown Imperial, the various-hued Day Lillies, the sweet Lily of the Valley, the Aloe, the Tuberrose, the Hyacinth, the Yucca, and the Star of Bethlehem, are all members of the lovely tribe And so, too, are the Asparagus the Onion, the Garlic, the Chives and the Shallot, the Tulant, which forms the main article of the diet of the Sandwich Islanders and the great Dragon Tree which is the giant of the order, and is named among the largest of the forest trees that now flourish on the earth's surface. Among the united members of the family is the Pharmium tenax, or Flax Lily, of New Zealand, a perennial plant, with leaves like the Iris, from two to six feet long, and a tall, branching panicle of brownish yellow flowers The fibre of the leaves is fine, strong and silky, and was manufactured by the New Zealanders into cloth and ropes before they ever learned any arts from the white man. The fiber has now been introduced into the world by making twine and ropes, but the plant itself is too delicate to thrive, except in the southern portion of the country. It is the native country it is barely cultivated.

In Liberia and Kamtschatka the bulbs of certain species of the Lily are used for bread, in the same manner as the sweet potatoes; and, in Europe, the young shoots of the Polygonatum (commonly so-called, Solomon's seal, are eaten as a substitute for asparagus. The Tartars are said to derive a part of their food from the bulbs of the Dog's-Tooth Violet (Erythronium) and the Camass (Camassia esculenta) of Queen-Tree (Hemerocallis) of Australia is eaten by the aborigines, and, when roasted, forms an agreeable dish. The plants of the pendulous genus Ixia resemble grass, sometimes four feet high and a foot in diameter, which terminate in little or long, oval bulbous, like onions and which does a dense cylindrical spike of flowers. The Brown-Trees have a slow growth, and it is reported that one species, the H. laxifloa, requires centuries to reach its full dimensions.

From the Lillyworts we derive the well-known drug called Aloes, which is the dried juice of various species of aloe growing in torrid countries. A specific cultivated aloe, the Aloe vera, which yields the largest quantity and the best quality, yet the drug is obtainable from several indigenous species of the genus that grow in the Barbadoes. Some of the flowers are highly ornamental plants. Their leaves are thick and large, often attaining the length of eight feet and more, and their prolonged into a hard, claw-like point. Offer threefourths of an inch in length. Hedges made of these plants are impenetrable to cattle. A fiber is obtained from their long, tough leaves that is very serviceable for making ropes, nets, etc. In Jamaica it is woven into hats and bags.

Many other of the Lillyworts are used in medicine in different parts of the world, and all possess, in a greater or less nauseous principle, and, in some species, in a violent poison. The fetid bulb of the Crown Imperial secretes deadly juices, and even the honey collected from its flowers is said to be emetic. The Squill maritima, so much employed in pharmacy, grows wild in the southern countries of Europe, and its bulbs not uncommonly attain the size of a man's head. The Asphodel also possesses a bitter principle, as do Squills, where a species grows the plains with its foliage and flowers, the sheep find it excellent grazing, and the cattle are pronounced fond of the bulbs.

The sweet scented Tuberose possesses the wonderful power of emitting sparks of fire in sultry evenings, and the fading blossoms the discharge is most frequent, and sometimes these dart out scintillations of flame in great abundance when the atmosphere is laden with electricity. It is in the evening hours that the Tuberose exhales most strongly its delicious fragrance, showing that Nature is their most actively at work in the mysterious laboratory executed in the heart of the flower.—Chicago Tribune.

The Keely Motor—What is Promised.

"If I have luck and my father break ages, I think I shall be able to exhibit a working model of the machine to the directors of the company, and those of the public who choose to," some about June 1," said Mr. Keely, the chief engineer of the new engine which is to revolutionize the present action of force, as he yesterday escorted a Times man into a workshop in the rear of his residence. "The power of this machine and what we have had to overcome in experimenting with it, can be realized by the fact, for instance, weighs 7,000 pounds, although it is only forty-two inches in diameter outside and thirty inches inside, being only seven inches thick. It is spherical, hoof wrought steel, and holds sixty-one gallons; it took two weeks to cool after manufacture. I can charge it in less than one second with vapor, generated by about three thimblefuls of water, that will run a 500 horse power engine nine hours. This gauge registers 50,000 pounds to the square inch, a 4,000 pounds over that of gunpowder. We have tested it eight times. The safety valve which you see here," and Mr. Keely touched with his foot a wrought iron pipe a foot in diameter and three inches in thickness, which enclosed, loosely, a smaller pipe, "cannot displace it. It bursts, as the outer casing prevents the pieces flying. Here is one we split," and he placed his hands upon a huge "valve" that had been riven like a reed. "The material we now use almost entirely is of steel, forged in solid masses and bored out The compressing rocks which are attached to that cylinder are my own invention. Understand what we are fighting against is thirty tons to the square inch This machine will develop 8,000 horse power—enough to run all the cars in Philadelphia and New York put together—and can be charged with seventy gallons of pure vapor per minute. We have about fifty men employed, all told, the work generally is done entirely by I. P. Morris and Morris & Tasker, and simply put up inside. Yes, that patch in the wall is where a bolt, that blew out, went through a short time ago. The greatest care is needed, and yet none of our appliances appear very fragile. This copper tube, which you see is but seven thicker than a lead pencil, and has a pressure on it larger than a man steam, will stand a pressure of 100,000 pounds to the square inch. A magnificent motor is being put together by Messrs Sargent & Company, Chicago, and Messrs. Hall & Company, in New-York, it is, of course, for our company." Mr Keely then escorted the reporter to his sanctum room, where a number of delicately-constructed specimens of Hippolyte motors and machines interested inspection. "The space in many points about the invention that it would take me almost four days to describe them, and your paper far more room than it could spare in a year to publish them. The peasant country has given birth to many marvels, steam, telegraphy, electricity and we are going to astonish the world in a greater manner than even great scientists can imagine. You may tell the readers of the Times that, barring accidents, the engine will be in working order by the Fourth of July." The interview then terminated.—Philadelphia Times.

—Books most influence by hard times are pocket books.

To all, particularly invalids, spring is a trying season Intimations of sickness should at once be attended to. Fatal diseases may be averted by allowing the bowels to become constipated and the system to remain in a disordered condition until the disorder has time to develop itself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure is sound and truthful saying. Therefore, the sudden at always provided with therapeutics now very prevalent headache, indigestion, disordered liver, want of appetite, nausea, or feverish attack, should be met with Dr. Sanford's Liver Pills. We know of no remedy so harmless and sure to be active. It at once strikes at the root of the diseases and produces a healthy tone to the system. People never need suffer from any disease arising from a disordered condition of the liver if they would take this excellent medicine when they find the indications of the malady. Pastilles lasting tone for the summer months should take three or four boxes of these pills with them. They have an almost instantaneous effect. They will relieve the patient of headache in one to two hours, and will effectually cleanse the liver of any disease that will effectually prevent a bilious attack. They are sold by all druggists.

Economy.—You will save money by eating Prof. Horsford's Cream of Tartar Baking Powder Bread. It will not sour, nor become soft like other kinds, and will remain in good condition for a week. Use it in the proportion of one teaspoonful to a pint of flour, with sufficient water, or in the proportion of one heaping teaspoonful to a quart of flour, with sufficient milk to make a soft dough. Directions for making cake, pastry, etc., in pamphlet to every can. Beware of imitations.

Ben Hill, the man who defended the horrors of the Andersonville prison pen is nominated as candidate for the U. S. Senate from the State.

A CAREFUL counting of the delegates elected to the Republican National Convention up to the present date shows that Blaine still leads the list with an estimated and probable strength of 172 votes for him as first choice. Bristow coming second with 113, and Morton standing third with 105. These are the three national candidates—the only ones who have received any consider, able support outside their own State. The other candidates are favorite sons and their estimated strength at present is as follows:Conkling of course, Hartranft 26, Hayes 17, and Jewell 13.

For good Wisconsin butter, in rolls, not tub packed, go to See & Washburn's

The latest charge against Sun. Bristow is one touching his moral character It is serious, considering that he is a church member. We'd ever be hard to begin his trouble to get started. It is said that, when about to enlist in the Union army, at the beginning of the war, his father in law, who was a rebel, remonstrated with him, and, during the interview, sharp words passed, when the old gentleman threatened to disinherit his daughter if the son in law persisted in his rash course. Mr Bristow replied, with emphasis I will not sell my country for gold and silver, and you may take you property and go to hell. The immorality of Mr. Bristow's conduct in this case was truly shocking, but it has this mitigating feature, that it furnishes most striking evidence both of the thoroughness of his patriotism and the soundness of his theology.

The Marquette and Mackinaw Railroad at Last Assured.

At last the construction of the Marquette & Mackinaw road is assured. The readers of The Tribune will recall that since the failure of the company of eastern capitalists to close a contract for the building of the road, the Marquette company, the original organizers for the construction, have been negotiating with reference to taking the contract on the basis of their original bid, with proposition has been under consideration on the part of the State Board for some weeks past. Last Monday the State Board of control held the adjourned meeting mentioned in the Tribune of last week, at which meeting a satisfactory adjustment of the minor difficulties between the interested parties was reached, and the contract was awarded to the Marquette company and signed by all the members of the State Board, on the part of the state, and by Mr. W. L. Wetmore, president of the company, on behalf of $103,000 in gifts for the complete and satisfactory performance of the contract. It is understood that the company will perfect their arrangements for going to work with as little delay as possible, and that every effort will be made to construct it as rapidly as can be done. The construction will be commenced from both ends of the line, in accordance with the requirements of the State Board. We congratulate the citizens to the northern portion of the state on the fact that this long needed railroad is at last a certainty, and that the efforts of Chicago parties to retard its construction have been thwarted. The indications are that the roads in the southern peninsula will soon be pushed forward to the straits, and thus by the completion of those roads in the upper and lower peninsula the two sections of the state will be more closely united, and the more rapid settlement of this northern section and consequent development of its resources is greatly aided.—Northern Tribune

Remember This.

Now is the time of the year for Pneumonia, Lung Fever, Coughs, Colds and fatal results of predisposition to Consumption and other Throat and Lung Diseases. Boschee's German Syrup has been used in this neighborhood for the past two or three years without a single failure to cure. If you have not used this medicine yourself, go to your Druggist, Geo. W. Crosier, and ask him for its wonderful success among his customers. Two doses will relieve the worst case. If you have no faith in any medicine, just buy a Sample Bottle of Boschee's German Syrup for 10 cents and try it. Regular size Bottle 75 cents. Don't neglect a cough to save 75 cents.

The state board of control will probably award the contract of building the Marquette & Mackinaw railroad to what is called the Wetmore party. There is no opposition apparent.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

The Game of "Polo"--Fourth of July in New York.

Lord Mandaville -- Hell Gate-Bowen's Expulsion.

The Great Mustang Race--The Fourth in Philadelphia.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, May 19, 1876.

The latest excitement among gentlemen of fortune and sporting proclivities is the introduction by Mr James Gordon Bennett of the game of "polo," which, in the old fashioned ball game of "shinney," with the improvement of mounting the players on horseback. It has long been a favorite in England, and now bids fair to prove the sensation of the season at Jerome Park, where extensive grounds have been devoted to its practice. The Polo Club are erecting an elegant house which will be ready for occupancy about the first June. Meantime Mr. Bennett has imported twenty-three mustang ponies from Mexico, and practice games are played twice a week. The latest occurred on the 15th inst., and was participated in by Messrs. Bennett, Gilt wald, P. Belmont, Augustus Jay, Schuyler Crosby, Rowland Robbins and D Moore on one side, opposed by Sir Bache Cussert—an experienced English player—aided by Messrs Douglass W Thorne, J. Mott, John Keese and A Somerville. Lord Mandeville acted as umpire and awarded two games to Mr Bennett's party, and four to Sir Bache Cussard's.

The game is a very lively one requiring excellent horsemanship and great physical endurance. The tough, wiry little mustangs, not over fourteen hands high, seem to enter into the spirit of the sport with great vim, while occasional collisions, to say nothing of sharp blows from the mallets, aimed at the ball, but lighting on the hands and legs of the players, give great animation to the game and amusement to the spectators. A match game will be played by the club about June 1st for a silver cup, and a very closely contested affair may be anticipated.

Club men are making merry over a practical lesson in Republican equality administered yesterday to Lord Mandaville, a scion of British nobility, by an unterrified American citizen of the mature age of twelve. The youngster was attracted by his lordship's towering get-up as a representative of the Coaching Club, and suggested that he would make a powerful attraction in Barnum's show. His irate lordship struck the audacious and irreverent juvenile, who immediately showed fight. Sanguinary results were prevented by the bystanders, and the probable result will be that Mr. Barnum will make the acquaintance of a Police Justice and obtain some enlarged ideas regarding American institutions, especially in this Centennial year.

In anticipation of the grand "show out" when the Hell Gate explosion takes place, the residents of Astoria are getting into a state of great trepidation. Mindful of the late destruction occasioned in New Jersey by giant powder, the Astorians anticipate the final end of all things, as far as they are concerned, and "desirable residences" may be had at absurdly low figures. Parties seeking eligible summer quarters should seize upon this opportunity, for, according to Gen. Newton, who is engineering this little affair, it will be no "great shakes" after all. He does not think the shock will be even felt upon the river banks, and in order to manifest his faith in the dictum of of science, announces his intention of standing within two hundred and fifty feet of the shaft when the great upheaval takes place.

The great mustang race, on the 18th inst., was brought to a sudden termination after two hundred and twenty-six miles had been accomplished within the requisite time. The racehorse, Geo. Parker, who attempted this unparalleled feat, is a most accomplished rider, and would doubtless have succeeded if he had paid due attention to the interposition of proper intervals for rest and refreshment. Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease that is man to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative Counter Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorator that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark colored vitiated matter with such unerring certainty, and in so mild a manner as to astonish and please the patient.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fortified.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offspring of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these as in all other constitutional diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative power, in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gilders, Painters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuge, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

The Game of "Polo"--Fourth of July in New York.

Lord Mandaville -- Hell Gate-Bowen's Expulsion.

The Great Mustang Race--The Fourth in Philadelphia.

From the Our Correspondent.

New York, May 19, 1876.

The latest excitement among gentlemen of fortune and sporting proclivities is the introduction by Mr James Gordon Bennett of the game of "polo," which is the old fashioned ball game of "shinney" with the improvement of mounting the players on horseback. It has long been a favorite in England, and now bids fair to prove the sensation of the season at Jerome Park, where extensive grounds have been devoted to its practice. The Polo Club are erecting an elegant house which will be ready for occupancy about the first June. Meantime Mr Bennett has imported twenty-three mustang ponies from Mexico, and practice games are played twice a week. The latest occurred on the 17th inst., and was participated in by Messrs Belmont, Griswold, P. Belmont, Aggassiz, Schuyler Crosby, Howland Robbins and H Moore on one side, opposed by Sir Bache Cunard—an experienced English player—aided by Messrs. Douglass W Thorne, J Mott, John Kane and A Somerville. Lord Mandaville acted as umpire and awarded two games to Mr. Bennett's party, and four to Sir Bache Cunard's.

The game is a very lively one, requiring excellent horsemanship and great physical endurance. The tough, wiry little mustangs, put over fourteen hands high, seem to enter into the spirit of the sport with great zest, while occasional collisions, to say nothing of sharp blows from the mallets, aimed at the ball, but lighting on the hands and legs of the players, give great animation to the game and amusement to the spectators. A match game will be played by the club about June 1st for a silver cup, and a very closely contested affair may be anticipated.

Club men are making merry over a practical lesson in Republican economy administered pointedly to Lord Mandaville, a scion of British nobility, by an unterrified American citizen of the mature age of twelve. The youngster was attracted by his lordship's surmounting pet up as a representative of the Coaching Club, and suggested that he would make a powerful attraction in Barnum's show. His irate lordship struck the audacious and irreverent juvenile, who immediately showed fight. Sanguinary results were prevented by the bystanders, and the probable result will be that his Lordship will make the acquaintance of a Police Justice and obtain some enlarged ideas regarding American institutions, especially in this Centennial year.

In anticipation of the grand "blow out" when the Hell Gate explosion takes place, the residents of Astoria are getting into a state of great trepidation. Mindful of the late destruction occasioned in New Jersey by giant powder, the Astorians anticipate the final end of all things, so far as they are concerned, and "desirable residences" may be had at absurdly low figures. Parties seeking eligible summer quarters should seize upon this opportunity, for, according to Gen Newton, who is engineering this little affair, it will be no "great shakes" after all. He does not think the shock will be even felt upon the river banks, and in order to manifest his faith in the dictum of of science, announces not intention of standing within two hundred and fifty feet of the shaft, when the great upheaval takes place.

The great mustang race, on the 18th inst., was brought to a sudden termination after two hundred and twenty-six miles had been accomplished within the requisite time. The rancheros, Geo. Parker, who attempted this unparalleled feat, is a most accomplished rider, and would doubtless have succeeded if he had paid due attention to the interposition of proper intervals for rest and refreshment. DR. HANSOM'S HIVE AND TOLU SYRUP

HONEY SYRUP

Dr. Cox's Hive (Croup) Syrup has been known and used by the medical profession over 100 years, and as a remedy for Croup and Coughs has an older and better reputation than any other Cough medicine ever offered to the public. It is now for the first time put up in pint bottles, and a remedy can be found in every medical dispensatory.

Dr. Hansom's Hive Syrup and Tolu, in addition to the ingredients for Cox's Hive Syrup, contains Balsam of Tolu, decoction of Skunk Cabbage Root and Lobelia, a combination that may confidently be relied on as a superior remedy for Croup, Whooping Cough, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs, and Colds, caused by an abscess on the Throat Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, or any internal organ.

This Syrup is Carefully Prepared under the personal direction of a regular Physician of over twenty years' practice, whose signature is attached to the directions on the bottle.

Its taste is very pleasant and children like it.

Every family should keep it as a ready remedy for Croup, Colds, etc., among the children.

DON'T TAKE IT TO HEART

Take a man's trouble
With brave face and cheerful tone,
And you will find the burden light
When you've shared it with your friend.

There's many a sorrow
Nearly crushes a woman
With its weight of tears,
Which could be lightened
By a sympathetic hearing.

How sometimes a word of cheering
Will make the day seem brighter,
And a smile on either face
Reflect the sunshine of cheer.

Remember, dear girl, and the heartaches can come
Not to you alone,
But to all the world.

FERGUSON'S AVENGERS.

Tale for the Colonel Ferguson.

The foregoing true words had instituted a course of terror in one of the loneliest districts of the Palmetto State, as finally witnessed by the Catawbaw and Broad Rivers and their gentle tributaries.

In the month of September, 1778, Evan, with a handful of the redoubtable Col. Ferguson, left to the frontiers of North Carolina, for the ostensible purpose of encouraging the return of the Tories to their allegiance to the King. Ferguson's force consisted in part of the most profligate and abandoned characters on the partisan ships, and had been raised by the direction of the most unrelenting despotism. The barely form of the cutthroats, Kentucky and Virginia, now against the mountaineers, and, did no fighting, and other backwoods worthies, garnished a disastrous defeat at Kings Mountain. Ferguson was then on the flatter side of his victorious campaign, numbering about a full wave nearly all captured or killed.

His command traversed the region of the Santee plantations, and forced Carnwallis to execute a murderous abandonment and conflagration.

"A single grave too many," the patriots said, and they battle. "Ferguson, the murderous scoul, and his force were overwhelmed. Their wounded lives are not known, enough to do us harm.

Two women in the vicinity of the battle-ground were taken daughter from, and the opposite to whose relations Ferguson had been guilty of his death, carried them to a secure and somewhat remote refuge.

Many were the women who fled from the battle to Allen's Mountain had given the news of the disaster terrible to be known. The confusion of the new terror was encountered by a fury the morning noon. A house in the house. He found the family in a state of the most distracted grief. Women, and he the corpses had been a paper bearing these words:

"Let no one give food or shelter to the murderers of Ferguson."

The men of the district assembled in the morning, and the made good headway, and reached her home without incident. The silence of the grave being about the house in place, and the lifting of the sun sent a chill of terror through the girl's heart. Through the kitchen, across the deserted parlor, and up the stairs, she crept to the room where she had left the object of her nocturnal quest. The drawer of the old bureau yielded what she sought—the old drawings from the garment when the voices of men fell upon her ears.

She stopped, dropped her prize, and with set heart in her throat crept to the window that overlooked the porch in front of the house.

She could see nothing, for the night was too dark, for the voices of men, mingled with the chattering of fife, communicated had her ears.

"This is old Beauchampe's home," said one. "He has been fattened for several days. The daughter, Ferguson by the manner in which we treated her father, has fled somewhere for protection."

Those words drove every vestige of color from the listener's face; they told her who were before were enough she could not even see the outlines of their persons. One week prior to her visit, her father, one of the King's Mountain heroes, was found dead in a palmetto grove, and the words of Ferguson's Avengers lay on his breast. Then she had deserted her home, knowing that the hand that had struck the father would not spare the daughter.

Will might the poor girl tremble when she found herself so near the scourges of the country, and she did not move until she heard the front door opened by a kick, and heavily booted feet in the room below.

Then a calm thought of her situation drove fear from her heart, and Alice Beauchampe remembered one of the most daring deeds of the Revolutionary War.

Her name in the house increased, and calls and toasts jests grossness followed in a disgusting way for the benefit

Alice, who had longed for a sight of the dreaded six, crept to a spot near the window where there was a crack in the door. Then applying her eye to the peek hole, she saw as well backing open the door, by a pistol, her.

There was, beyond doubt the avengers of Ferguson's death, for several marks by the light, along with three or four backwoodsmen, whose dress showed them to be of the most pattern a cellar. Tall, rough, dark-men, one looking fellows they were, armed with pistols, carbines and sabres, the kind of men who never count the scales of mercy or listen to the pleading of any cause. Just such fellows as they were Alice had supposed them to be, for she had seen many of the prisoners taken at the King's Mountain, and she longed for the presence of a band of outlaws. There were seven in South Carolina at the time who would have given their right hand for a chance to exterminate the Avengers, and Alice, whose father little knew the depth of her love without her, and the fiend who had murdered her father.

Perhaps the shadows of the window sash did not permit him to see the pistol that was clutched in the hand of the fair young girl, else his rashness might have been curbed.

"Kneel to you, Nero!" he cried, in a contemptuous tone, and he staggered back against a piano key, but alas; they were not very near.

We, I will here and finish that wine!" said one of the leaders of the band, whose face told that he had already imbibed freely. "Bring in the poultry, and on old Dan's chapter with me!" prepare a feast."

At this command, one of the men left the house, but soon returned, leading with him a duck and several chickens, from whose freshly wring necks the blood was dripping.

"How's the horses?" asked one of the avengers, as the man flung the poultry on the table.

"Standing like rocks," was the reply. "Such horses as they are! You could run a thousand miles, easily, more isn't a rebel with in ten miles of this accursed place."

"Why, there's the Widow Hartwell!" cried a third. "Let's go for her!" he replied. "How lonely it is! Her fiddle is so, and we can go him at last."

"And prospect him with a bayonet-point! Ha! ha!"

And the laugh went round the room.

Alice Beauchampe did not wait till the laugh was ended, while she left the front house with its dreadful echoes, she glided across the room to a window that looked out upon the dark palmetto grove, beyond the burdstop.

There was no sash in the window and the cold wind of the night kissed her pale cheek as she parted the shrubbery. For just a moment she tried to pierce the dark mass beneath the window, but, having to her endeavors, she crept out of the window, resolved to trust to fortune for success.

The distance to the ground was not great, and the caring girl glighted with safety upon it.

Now she was free to make her escape, her friends are laid lately her, but resolved that direction was not her attention.

"Heaven and save" she murmured as she glided across the old swamp that separated her home from the Pocotaligo, and left the rebels hiding there that the men they have in their power. I have thought that I commanded men, not drunkards!" and he struck the table with the butt of his pistol, but could not rouse his stupefied followers.

The next moment, with an oath on his lips he strode to the door, which he jerked open and stepped upon the porch

"Curse such dogs as I look!" he hissed. "I suppose I must lead them myself up and to each foot in the saddle!"

He was stepping from the porch for the purpose of attending to the horses, which he supposed were still tethered at the trees, when a form rose before him and he started back with a gasp of terror

"Who in the infernal——"

"Alice Beauchampe!" was the interruption of the apparition. "The daughter of the old man basely murdered at the house! Down on your miserable knees, footless hang, and beg for the mercy you have never granted others! Down, I say!"

THE NEWS.

A SERVICE dispatch of the 20th says that the French and German marines and the Turkish military and civil authorities united to escort the remains of the murdered French and German Consuls to their burial place.

On the morning of the 20th a locomotive standing near the Michigan Southern Railroad depot in Chicago, exploded with great violence, seriously injuring five bystanders, and hurling some of the fragments a distance of two blocks.

A TERRIBLE explosion of fire damp occurred at Scranton, Pa., on the morning of the 20th, causing the death of one man and serious injury to four others. The man who was killed was in the act of stepping into the bucket at the moment of the explosion, and was hurled high in air, and then fell back 400 feet to the bottom of the shaft. The gas caught from a miner's lamp.

AT Hunkston Station, Ky., on the Shiloh or Mcrsville & Lexington Railroad, a very serious accident occurred. A bridge gave way during the passage of a passenger train, and the rear coach, containing about thirty passengers, was precipitated into the water below. About thirty persons were more or less injured.

A VIENNA telegram of the 21st says grave apprehensions were entertained at Constantinople in respect to the Sultan's mental condition. He is said to be subject to delusions fearing that he will be burned alive or poisoned.

THE vicinity of Norristown, N. J., and Lancaster, Pa., was visited by violent hailstorms on the 21st, which caused great damage to windows, green houses, fruit, etc. The hailstones were some of them as large as hen's eggs.

TURKEY was a tremendous hailstorm at Gayville, Dakota, on the 21st. The ground was covered with hailstones as large as hen's eggs to the depth of four inches. All the windows in the town facing south and southwest were demolished, and the wind tore down fences, uprooted trees and overturned buildings. Several persons were badly injured.

ACCORDING to a Berlin special to the London Daily Telegraph of the 22d, the Sultan of Turkey was about to abdicate.

AN animated debate prevailed in the British Parliament on the 22d, on the proposition to grant amnesty to the Fenian convicts. Herald Lefevre, the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, opposed the project but seemed disposed to leave the disposition of the matter to the Government for the present.

THE proposition to amnesty the Communist convicts was rejected by the French Senate on the 22d. Only eight votes were cast in the affirmative.

THE President received a dispatch on the 22d, announcing the death, in London, on the 20th, of Mrs. Sartoris, his daughter.

A FIRE-DAMP explosion in a coal-mine in Chesterfield County, Va., on the 20th, caused the death of eighteen and serious injury to two others.

THE President, on the 22d, sent to the Senate the following nominations: Major to Edward, Att'y-Gen. Hayward, Attorney-General, Secretary of War Taft, Secretary of War, J. Donald Cameron (son of Senator Cameron), of Pennsylvania. They were confirmed.

ACCORDING to a London telegram of the 23d, the Attorney-General had requested that Winslow be remanded for eight days longer to enable the Government to apply to the Queen's Bench for the solution of certain questions of law in the discussions between the British Government and that of the United States.

THE four Greek sailors who murdered the captain, mate and second officer of the ship Ionelie, some months ago, were duly executed at the Newgate prison, in London, on the morning of the 23d.

THE Secretary of the Navy, on the 23d, wrote to the House Committee on Naval Affairs demanding a hearing before the committee, in open session, in relation to certain newspaper charges in respect to the manner in which he had managed the affairs of his department. Such charges he characterized as utterly false.

UNITED STATES MINISTER OLIVER, on the 23d, resigned the Austrian mission to participate in the Italian gubernatorial canvass.

THE New Jersey Democratic State Convention met at Trenton on the 23d and elected a delegation to the National Convention, which was, by resolution, instructed for Hon. Joel Parker, of New Jersey.

THE President on the 24th nominated Edward M. Beale, of California, formerly of California—to succeed Mr. Orth as Minister to Austria.

MR. WILLIAM H. HERBERT, for a considerable period connected with the New York Herald, has purchased Mr. Marble's interest in that paper, and succeeds him in the editorial management.

THE New Hampshire Republican State Convention met on the 24th, and selected delegates to the National Convention. They were uninstructed.

THE Kansas Republican State Convention, held on the 24th, chose delegates to the Republican National Convention, and adopted a resolution declaring James G. Blaine to be its first choice as candidate for President of the United States.

THE Minnesota Republican State Convention assembled at St. Paul on the 24th, and elected delegates to the National Convention. A resolution endorsing Blaine for the Presidency was adopted. The platform favors hard money, as it copyrights in paper convertible into coin.

THE case of D. W. MUNN, ex-Supervisor of Internal Revenue, on trial at Chicago for conspiracy to defraud the Government of revenues, was concluded on the 24th, by a verdict of not guilty.

THE Nebraska Republican State Convention which was held on the 23d and 24th, adopted a resolution instructing its delegates to the National Convention to support Blaine for the Presidency.

IN an editorial on the Black Hills, the Chicago Tribune of the 24th says an additioner, who has lived in Colorado many years, and has had large experience in the mining business, writes: "There is a little gold all through the Hills, but I do not believe there are any paying dig gings; at least none have been found yet; and, if there ever is one, the gold will speak for itself. The amounts reported from time to time as having been dug out are taken from the Hills do not amount to a drop in the bucket in comparison to what should have been taken out of a mining camp if it was a gold country." Another correspondent writes: "As yet I have not seen a gold mine in the hills that will pay two dollars per day per hand, and the wonderful reports circulated in the States have brought thousands to the country, without money or grub enough to last them thirty days. I fear, if something is not done soon, many will suffer."

THE Michigan Democratic State Convention was held at Lansing on the 24th, and elected delegates to the St. Louis Convention, standing sixteen for Tilden and six for Hendricks. A resolution was adopted declaring that gold is the only money recognized by the traditions of the Democratic party as warranted under the Constitution.

THE Missouri Republican State Convention which met at Jefferson City on the 24th, selected delegates to the National Convention, who are said to be divided between Blaine and Morton, with three for Brisbow and one for Conkling. The delegates elected favors a currency of coin or paper convertible into coin.

THE Illinois Republican State Convention met at Springfield on the 24th. The following State ticket was nominated: For Governor, Shelby M. Cullom; Lieutenant-Governor, Andrew Shuman; Secretary of State, Geo. H. Harlow; Auditor, Russell Anditor, Thomas Neeldles; State Treasurer, Edward Rutz; Attorney-General, H. Edsall; reinumbent. Delegates were chosen to the National Convention, who were uninstructe.; but are said to be largely in favor of Blaine. The platform declares that the Convention declares that the Convention looks with confidence to the National Republican party to solve the financial problem of the currency; that the credit of the Nation shall remain untarnished, and just regard be had for the rights and interests of all the people, that as well as West. North as well as South; that the Republican party has given to the people the best currency they have ever had or ever devised, and deprecates any legislation that might by any possibility cause a return to the system of paper currency in existence before the war.

A LONDON telegram of the 25th notices the departure, for Smith's Sound, of the British steamer Alert, to bring to a summary close the dispatches deposited there by Capt. Nares' Arctic expedition.

JOHN S. RUTAN, of Two orlvania, was, on the 25th, nominated as United States Consul to Florence, the nomination of Mr. Wirt Sykes having been withdrawn.

U. S. GRANT, Jr., has been admitted to the practice of law in New York city.

THE Kentucky Democratic State Convention was held at Louisville on the 25th. Eleven district delegates were chosen to the National Convention. The resolutions demand the repeal of the Specie-Resumption act, but insist upon a return to specie payments. They declined fine it can be done without detriment or sacrifice of financial interests of the people.

THE California State Democratic platform favors a gold and silver currency, and opposes Chinese immigration. The delegates to the National Convention were instructed to vote for the nomination of Gov. Tilden for the Presidency.

A STATE Convention of the Spencer wing of the Alabama Democracy was held on the 25th, and delegates to the National Convention were chosen. They are said to be opposed to the renomination of Senator Morton's nomination for the Presidency. A State ticket was also nominated headed by James Clarke for Governor.

UNITED STATES MISSIONER OLIVER, one of the Company of Cincinnatians, who left for the Black Hills, some time since, visited Kearney Junction, on May 2, states: "The Indians are on the war path, killing miners at a fearful rate. Miners are returning to the States by hundreds." He says that "out of forty-two men at Deadwood, twenty-seven of them have been killed by the red devils. Five more were killed and scalped within three miles of Custer City. There is plenty of gold northwest of Custer, but it is impossible to get at it on account of the Indians."

THE Kansas Republican State Convention, for the nomination of a State ticket, has been called to meet at Topeka on the 16th of August.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

ON the 19th, after the introduction and reference in the Senate of several bills and the consideration of several petitions, legislative business was suspended and the impeachment question was further considered, with closed doors.

A resolution was offered and referred in the House for the final adjournment of the present session of Congress on the 12th of June. The bill encouraging the settlement of the lands thereto reserved by the mining and overflowed lands was passed. The Naval Appropriation bill was debated in Committee of the Whole.

On the 20th in the Senate, Mr. Morrow, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported a report in the case of Senator Spencer, recommending him from the charges of bribery and corruption in connection with his election. Mr. Sanderson, the Democratic member of the committee, concurred in the conclusions but the evidence taken contained nothing implicating Senator Spencer in the bribery, but contended that the inquiry was not carried far enough, and that the allegations filed as to the invalidity of the Legislature which elected Mr. Spencer should have been inquired into, and testimony taken thereon. The Senate bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay G. B. Tyler and R. H. Lockett $5d, wrongfully outlawed in the Second District of Kentucky, as tax for keeper of a bonded warehouse, was passed over the President's veto—nine 45 gave cause. The impeachment case was further considered in a secret session.

In the House Mr. Pike, of Wisconsin, made a personal explanation denying the charges made against him in the memorial sent to Congress by the Wisconsin Legislature, and claimed that he had been elected fairly and honestly; he said he had prepared to defend his case, but before it was decided in the contested seat fight, and for the rights of the Legislature to interfere in the matter. A bill was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make allowance for compensation to collectors of internal revenue who went out of office prior to Feb. 1875, on final settlement of their accounts. Mr. Hiscock was excused from service on the Louisiana Investigating Committee. The Naval Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole.

On the 21st, in the Senate, W. H. Barnum was sworn in as Senator from Connecticut. A petition was presented and referred from A. M. Clapp, Congressional Printer, on the subject that he is an officer of the Senate, that great injustice had been done him by the Committee on Printing in the matter of his salary, and that he was restrained from size by that committee, and that no opportunity had been given him to explain the allegations of the charges against him. The impeachment question was further considered in the House, the case of absence of Speaker Kerr was extended five days. A resolution was adopted relative to the production of American citizens in the Gallinan case, and also for the reduction in the Beckwith-Keeper Pittsburgh, and to transfer the duties of Beckwith to the Sergeant-at-Arms, pending further orders. A proposed amendment to the Naval Appropriation bill, reducing the number of Beckwith to the Sergeant-at-Arms, pending further orders. A proposed amendment to the Naval Appropriation bill, reducing the number of naval officers and their pay, was rejected in Committee of the Whole.

On the 22d, a favorable report was made in the Senate on the House bill granting to the State of Missouri all the lands therein selected to swamp and overflowed lands. After reports of committees of no importance little the House chamber question was further considered in secret session. The Naval and Indian Appropriation bills were considered in Committee of the Whole in the House, and the former was presented to the House, with amendments, and passed. The Louisiana Investigating Committee was authorized to sit during recess, and Mr. Woodburn, of Nevada, was appointed to fill the vacancy in such case, the latter caused by the withdrawal of Mr. Hoskins.

On the 24th, in the Senate, the House joint resolution requesting the President to direct the Secretary of the Navy to detail a vessel of war to convey the remains of Edward D. Baker, late of England, to the United States was passed. The Senate then went into executive session, and after a short time adjourned. In the House, the Senate amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill were concurred in. The Senate bill granting to the State of Missouri the swamp lands therein selected was passed. The Naval Appropriation bill was debated in Committee of the Whole.

On the 25th in the Senate, Mr. Morrow, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported a report in the case of Senator Spencer, recommending him from the charges of bribery and corruption in connection with his election. Mr. Sanderson, the Democratic member of the committee, concurred in the conclusions but the evidence taken contained nothing implicating Senator Spencer in the bribery, but contended that the inquiry was not carried far enough, and that the allegations filed as to the invalidity of the

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

BEHIND a dispute at Millington, Tuscola County, on the morning of the 19th, a man named Ward had his throat cut by another man named Schafer. At last accounts Ward was expected to die.

DANIEL P. Bennett, of Battle Creek, arrested on the Chicago & Lake Huron Railroad, while assisting in extending some bridges from a bridge on the line, a few days ago, lost his balance and fell, striking his head against a bridge. His injuries were quite serious and fatal results were feared at last account.

BAY CITY was been doubled to hold a rowing regatta on the Detroit River on the Fourth of July.

A FEW mornings ago, the night watchman at the foot of Twelfth street, Detroit, discovered a box between the bank piling, which on being opened was found to contain human remains packed in lime. No clue has been discovered to their identity.

THE Legislature party is called into existence on the occasion of the people, whose interests are paramount, without regard to party, and especially to a ruinous policy, which the Republican and Democratic parties have in charge. And in view of the failure of these parties to furnish relief in the present crisis, the framing of this call is hereby declared to be the last hope and expectation of a suffering people, as the interest party, and until a Republican and party convention to meet and frame a platform and nominate candidates for the immediate and unconstitutional abridgment of the currency act of 1873, and 1875, and the resumption of our industries from the paralysis which has been given by that legislation, and we call upon all patriotic men to organize in their respective localities for the speedy relief of the down-trodden people and earnestly to urge the duty of casting Democratic votes to Congress in the approaching election, without regard to party, and stop the present suicidal and destructive policy of the Government.

Mr. Sullivan then moved that the resolutions be referred to the committee on resolutions, with instructions to report back to the convention at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Mr. Sullivan's motion was carried by a vote of 45 to 41.

The committee on resolutions then reported the following platform, which was adopted unanimously:

1. We believe that the Government should pay its debts in dollars of the most value, and that the Government should pay its debts in dollars of the most value, and that the Government should pay its debts in dollars of the most value, and

OUR RAPID LETTER.

From the Star Correspondent.

THE YORK, May 30, 1876.

DEAR SENTINEL:

What would the possessor of this metropolis say to a proposition that within thirty years the city from New York to Port Chester would be made as close and compact as Brooklyn is to-day? Richard Grant White says the writers could not be accused upon the testimony of the people here who should have witnessed such a progression who, and yet that would only express the fact will not be considered true. Robert Louis Stevenson, the great American author and traveler, has made a flying trip across the continent which will compliment either his powers of observation or his memory, as events and impressions have succeeded each other in rapid succession for the past month. Mr. Stevenson is a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, and is a man of fine physique, being six feet high, or one of the most intelligent appearance in the United States and as a writer not naked to among the writers of the day.

The Rapid Letter had no further difficulties since the printer was prepared to comply with the requirements. This difficulty would be with the mail. DR. A. TRASK'S

MAGNETIC OINTMENT

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask is engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and has discovered the Magnetic Ointment. At the age of ninety years he was consulting, consulting in the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the power of which in removing pain is expressed in the name of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Mineral or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and wonderful effects of this Ointment, established its reputation in the minds of thousands, rather than as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, when there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the circulatory vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. In the most malignant cases, it gradually but surely and completely restores the natural action of the system.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the whole frame, every bone and sinew, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Being as much at home with internal as external diseases.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has been used in cases of the most powerful poisons, and in every instance has proved powerful to counteract the effects of the poison, and in every instance has proved powerful to counteract the effects of the poison, and in every instance has proved powerful to counteract the effects of the poison.

No patient ever need die who has access where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete relief ever discovered. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In nine-tenths cases out of a hundred it will give relief to the most severest Nervous Headache in three minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of marvelous value.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Ulceration, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Cuts, Chapped Hands, Sore in the Face or Bones, Burns, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Piles, Sores, Scalds, &c., will be found to be relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful [illegible] ever [illegible].

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and drought, are invariably accompanied by derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment a purgative, assisting the operation of this medicine, is necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS. They expel the bilious matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and restoring to healthy action the digestive organs. When these evacuations are checked during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and drought, are invariably accompanied by derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No matter what you may feel sick or ailing, Vinegar Bitters may be taken.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Coated Tongue, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the Region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms are the offspring of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove to you its merits better than a lengthy recommendation. Remember, it is not a vile drink, but a Medicine, and should be taken as such.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Tumors, Ulcers, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Diseases of the Skin, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many human beings, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuge, no anthelmintic will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

TUESDAY, ... JUNE 1, 1876.

OUR PARIS LETTER.

From Our Own Correspondent.

New York, May 28, 1876.

What would the government fall have thought of a proposition that million thirty years ago that from New York to San Francisco would be spent in less than five days, during which a whole train from the regular twelve passengers from the Adirondacks who should have been permitted upon the railroad who should leave, embarked under a proclamation thus, and yet this seemingly impossible feat will soon be accomplished fact. Nearly double a million of dollars have been appropriated by the Legislature of this State, and the Governor will sign the bill in a few days. From the moment the contract is signed the work of construction will be pushed with the greatest vigor, and it is expected that the road will be completed in eighteen months. The estimated time for the transit of the mails, express packages and general passengers over the road is seventy hours, or about four hours less, by the time of leaving New York. The object of this unprecedented expedition is surprising it is the transfer of the mails, express packages and general passengers over the road in the early part of July on the car, to San Francisco, where it will be produced in all its original magnificence. The "train" will go by the Kansas Pacific Railroad. The locomotive of the company and the lucky passengers are having a few days in advance by the ordinary conveyance.

The brilliant success which has attended the production of the great comedy under the management of Messrs Jarrett & Palmer is unprecedented in the annals of the stage, and places them in the very front rank of theatrical impresarios. Their recent undertaking—of the transportation to the Pacific coast of an operatic company of such magnitude as would cause any one experienced and energetic men to hesitate, but it is eminently to their credit that the most delectable go about undertakings of the most formidable proportions and will long be remembered as one of the most striking incidents of this centennial and memorable year.

Philadelphia, May 29.

While every one admits that the International Exhibition is emphatically a "big thing," and figures all the records in many respects, there seems to be much doubt in the minds of many as to whether it will pay, in a pecuniary sense, in fact it seems to them very much as if there would be a large balance on the wrong side of the ledger, when it comes to the final settlement of the little bills which are constantly growing bigger. It is true that the Centennial Board of Finance has, as confidently anticipated by many, a handsome surplus of receipts over expenditures, but it does not appear that it is going to be as much as was expected when the Board was organized, and will very likely not pay even its debts. The number of through passengers counted as visitors and the tickets for the trip will come falling greatly short, being inaccurately based by persons of nothing which can be certainly ascertained. The guess will be furnished with goods to be sold during the season, counted for a week at the Grand Pacific Hotel, and interested with a statement regarding the sale at any time. A few statements are taken to Chicago, and one or two flights arriving there within twenty-four hours from the time of leaving New York. DR. A. TRASK'S

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a series of experiments upon the properties and power of vegetable, animal and combined. At the age of seventy, took to the world as the result of his experiments a preparation of vegetable extracts, the power of which in the cure of Inflammatory Diseases, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sores, Burns, Bruises, Wounds, Sprains, Swellings, Pains, Aches, Stiffness, Lameness, Soreness, Contracted Muscles, Tumors, Felons, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Tetter, Chilblains, Frosted Feet, Chapped Hands, Sore Throat, Quinsy, Croup, Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pleurisy, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Piles, Female Weakness, Leucorrhœa, Prolapsus Uteri, Painful Menstruation, Spinal Diseases, Kidney Complaints, Dropsy, Gravel, Stone in the Bladder, Diseases of the Urinary Organs, Sick Headache, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Neuralgia, Fits, Nervous Prostration, Paralysis, Locomotor Ataxia, Spinal Irritation, Diseases of the Eye, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Pains in the Back, Side, Chest, Limbs and Joints, and all Nervous Affections.

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of Chronic, Inflammatory and other diseases, justifies the claim that this is the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its merits.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to sustain a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and results in cleanliness of the blood. In this remedy a compelling power is gained over the more malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame, and in its course to the seat of disease, it neutralizes all morbid and poisonous matter, and leaves the system under the influence of its purifying and healing influences. Thus it cures as readily with internal as external means.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to persons after the nerves that the most powerful internal remedies failed, to produce any effect, have frequently been the case in hopeless cases of the Disease.

No patient ever need die with this remedy, where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever discovered. For Dysentery or Painful Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In thirty-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief in the worst cases of Neuralgia in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is a perfect antidote.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Contracted Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Frosted Feet, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Sprains, Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Tetter, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Boils, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

PHILADELPHIA has had a special centennial census taken at her own expense, and is rewarded by finding that her population now numbers 817,448 souls—an increase of 113,426 since 1870. There are 21,312 more females than males in the city, and there are 746,000 houses.

THE statement is made by the President of a life insurance company that it is a fact that women live longer in this country than in any other. They are also robust and muscular than the women of other nations, but their tenacity of life is strong, and their constitutions are sufficiently enduring to keep them alive considerably longer than their appearance, as a general thing, would warrant.

THE broken arm bone of a patient in a hospital at Ten would not heal, although all the usual modes of cure were tried. Then he was put under the influence of ether, an incision four inches long was made parallel to the bone, and the broken part exposed. The ends were fitted together after being sawed on the surface, holes were drilled in them, and a pin put through. The healing was thereafter rapid.

THERE is small hope. The sweetness of innocence is not the sugar you have always supposed, to glycerythrin, but to the presence of glycerythicine of ammonia. Glycerythrin itself is nearly inodorous, and therefore tasteless, but when ammonium has been added it becomes yellow, acquires the loathsome taste in a concentrated degree, and all the alluring virtues of a bandrut or bourbine sticks might be piled up on a two cent piece.

AT a recent sitting of the French Academy we observe a communication was received from M. Fitche on the tunes and flora of the peat beds of Champagne. Among the animals the remains of which have been found in those beds are the badger, otter, lawyer, pig, stag, swan, etc. Insects are represented by various beetles, and orthoptera by the locust, Ma. Lignum, etc. The vegetable kingdom is represented by the elm, walnut tree, oak, willow, box, juniper, fir and yew, and various kinds of lignous plants. The trunks left by man are numerous axes, cinders, half-burned logs, pottery, some bone, flint implements and bits of bronze and iron.

THE Paris correspondent of the New York Times writes an interesting letter from that city, in which he says that it is shown where the French people's money goes. It will be a matter of very general surprise to this country that the most of the money goes for the support of the army in time of peace. The total estimates for 1877 is 2,065,000,000 francs. Of this sum for war 535,000,000 francs, for the navy 170,000,000 francs, and the Marine 180,000,000 more, in all 722,000,000 francs, while all the other departments together have but 473,000,000, the balance being absorbed by the public debt, interest, pensions and internal revenue service. As a matter of interest we give the war budget for some years past:

	Francs.	Francs.
1869	295,528,274	295,528,226
1870	385,000,000	385,000,000
1871	534,113,716	380,077,153
1872	535,000,000	535,000,000
1873	512,000,000

IN 1780 the budget was but 584,000,000, and yet the French people are so fond of glory that they make no objections to the enormous taxes levied upon them for military purposes.

CENTENNIAL JOTTINGS.

THERE will be 14,000 roses in bloom during June in horticultural Hall in the Centennial Exposition.

THE water-supply by which the Exhibition grounds and buildings are supplied will yield 1,000,000 gallons a day.

A NOVEL instrument receives at the Centennial is a large silver bar from the Bonanza mine of Flood & O'Brien, at Virginia City. Its weight is 115 pounds Troy, and its value in gold is $1,824.65, and in coin, $2,367.19.

A FINE exhibition many respects is made from the Free Industrial Schools of Massachusetts. The display, including nearly five thousand specimens of needlework, will have been profitably applied to mathematics, painting on china, penmanship, and a great many other forms of useful, decorative art.

PHILADELPHIA has been "putting up" quite liberally for municipal arrangements during the Centennial. Five hundred extra policemen, at $2.50 per day, are among the new furniture, and the Mayor is to have $50,000 for entertaining and hospitality purposes. Fourth of July fireworks have been provided for in the sum of $30,000.

ASSOCIATE HALL is rapidly assuming shape and, in a few days, will be in full running order. The display in this department will certainly prove an interesting one, as portions of the entire Exposition. The immense agricultural resources, not only of the United States but of all the prominent foreign countries, have a full representation in this department. In the implements of agriculture, Ohio is found to be by far the largest exhibitor, New York and Illinois being second.

THE ravages erected by the various States for their Commissioners are most of them in moderately good taste; those built by the Japanese and English colonial Governments are architecturally artistic. The Catholic Temperance Societies have erected a white marble fountain in honor of that cause, and the glassblowers a wooden structure in honor of theirs. From the center of an artificial lake a hundred ingeniously-arranged jets are sparkling, washing from the sunlight a brilliant rainbow. And of all the buildings on the grounds, there is one of which what was said of the London Exhibition Building of 1860 can be said, that it is "a monstrous outrage upon national fortbearance."

THE children of Philadelphia is proud and happy. He reflects that a Centennial is not likely—under ordinary circumstances—to come oftener than once in a hundred years, and he does not expect to see another. He is bound to make the most of this one, and therefore his big may blow into tatters, but it shall hang, and wave, and flutter, till only a few shreds are left, and those shreds are gone. He is exalted and full of songs of joy, and of what he will sing, he would fly around the Centennial grounds, and possibly light down inside, so as to obtain the quickest out of the fifty cents which should be paid for admission. Most of the Philadelphia area can fill of enthusiasm over the recent events that they feel almost too good for this earth. When Fourth of July comes, I fear it will be necessary to hang clock weights to their coat-tails and put bricks in their hats in order to keep them down.—Chas. Chicago Tribune.

THE provision made for the accommodation and gratification of visitors to the International Exhibition is sufficiently ample. A narrow-gauge double-track steam railway, the grading for which cost $1,000,000 alone, winds about the borders of the grounds as to take its passengers to every one of the principal buildings. If it there either be bought, the rails are only three feet apart, and the change for conveyance is five cents. No carriages are necessary; the entire Exhibition can be seen from and in the cars. There are also contentedly constructed rolling-chairs, in which invalids and tired people of a dollar are glad to be wheeled in the most humiliated manner and be wheeled along at a rate of thirty cents an hour and at a speed not exceeding a mile a mile. The "Department of Public Comfort" occupies a house, near the Main Hall, provided with parlors for ladies and gentlemen, refreshment rooms and even baggage-rooms. Checks are given in exchange for packages of all sizes. For the telegraph service there are a central office for the service, which might, however, be reduced by the employment of convicts and the penal regiments in the army.—London Saturday Review.

How a Little Boy Drowned his Big Brother.

MR ALEXANDER HEADLY, a young man about twenty-five years of age, who was studying for the ministry, and was lately married, and his little brother, aged nine or fourteen years old, were drowned last Thursday, while crossing Sac River in a bark skiff. They had attached a rope across the creek by which to cross, and crossed in safety several times. Alexander was taking his brother across to herd some cattle on the range on the opposite side of the creek from their farm, and in starting it seems a limb caught the little fellow and threw him out, and in trying to clinch back into the skiff he upset it and threw his brother out. The elder brother got the younger one on his back and told him to be quiet and he would swim safe to shore with him, but the little fellow was so excited that he climbed upon his brother's head and sank him, both going out of sight.—*Greenfield (Mo.) Adventure With a Wolf.

IT was on a clear frosty night, the last of the old year, soon to be succeeded by the new. The winter months already past, had been quite severe, and the result was every river and pond for miles around presented a frozen sheet of ice. I had received a pair of skates as a Christmas gift, and wishing to try their steel, I had afternoon skated over to see my cousin Charley, who lived with his grandfather near Indian Creek, one of the many small branches of the Solota, about four miles from our house.

I came upon Charley, who was also skating, but had not as yet ventured farther than the creek above mentioned. For over two hours we amused ourselves in every available way which the ice only can permit, and then I gave Charley to understand that it was time that I should start for home. But he would not listen to this, at least, not until I would go up to the house. So I went.

After supper grandfather held us seated for another hour, with stories of adventure, etc. Again, as I rose to go, they wished to detain me until morning, but knowing the alarm and uneasiness my absence would occasion at home after having promised to return at dusk, I would not be persuaded to remain. Also earlier I thought I should appreciate the journey back. So, rather regretfully, Charley accompanied me to the creek. Hastily strapping on my skates I launched out a few strokes and turned, as I heard him say: "I'll be over to-morrow, Vivian."

I had just before promised to do so. I again assented and desired that he should "throw Blinker," he said, addressing his dog—a cur which I had given him. The animal was overjoyed to renew my acquaintance after having been separated so long, but now sat on the bank whining mournfully, as he saw I was about to leave him. But obedient to his new master's voice, he followed Charley away. I struck out with a slow and easy motion, for my legs ached, which the fatigue of skating most of the day had brought on. As I entered the river from the creek, with the dark outlines of the trees stretching far above on either side, a feeling of uneasiness crept over me, which the wild stories I had heard from grandfather were still lingering in my memory, did not help to alleviate, and I regretted my hasty decision in declaring their hospitality of the night.

I looked back in hopes of seeing Charley, and as a last resort let him I would have gladdened with the prospect. And yet it has shown a willingness to modify its plans in accordance with the changing requirements of the place. If I could but induce Lord Beaconsfield to adopt the button-hole its President, I would suggest to him that the present catalogues, vilely as they have been received, are worthy of great attention; that the reasoned prices are really too often exorbitant; that the means of egress from the Main Hall are dangerously limited; that the Bureau of London Commissioners issued shilling tickets on certain days for the laboring classes, the American Commissioners might have twenty-five cent tickets also.—*Cor. Proposed Connection of the Caspian and Black Seas.

AS American engineer of eminence, Mr. Spalding, has submitted to the Geographical Commission of Russia a lengthy report upon the Caspian and Black Seas. Mr. Spalding maintains that the Caspian is drying up, and will soonly become a desert, while the diminution of rainfall will destroy the surrounding territories. This, he says, has already occurred in historic times, while countries having been denuded by the shrinkage of the Caspian. He recommends that a deep and broad cutting should be made from the Caspian westward, to a point where it would be five meters below the level of Black Sea, and a smaller cutting, from that point to the Black Sea, the water of the latter, which is fifteen meters higher than that of the Caspian, would then cut a deep and broad channel for itself, and refill the Caspian to its old level, giving, in fifty years, straight ocean communication between the Mediterranean and Persia. The distance between the Black Sea and the Caspian is 100 miles. The period required for refilling might be reduced one half by a navigable canal from the Don and the Volga, so that the waters of both rivers, instead of those of the Volga only, might fill into the Caspian. Mr. Spalding calculates that the two cuttings might be finished in six years, but says nothing of the expense, which might, however, be reduced by the employment of convicts and the penal regiments in the army.—London Saturday Review.

Sunshine.

As important elections approach one of the saddest marks of the times is the reckless indifference with which charges are made against public men. The two great parties lite which the people are divided have principles and purposes at stake that there need be no mistake in regard to either. Only let this be borne in mind, that the Nation expects from the Republican party what it would not dream of finding in the Democracy. The record of the Republican party is one of which it may be proud. Its blunderings review the errors and dangers of the past, the more they are satisfied with the success and the safety that followed. While the sway of the Republican party was unbroken, its policy sought to establish peace and prosperity throughout the Union. The blessings conferred by the Republican party on the South the most selfish of the disloyal Confederates cannot deny. Republicans found the leaders of the Democracy in England with the southern rebels, and hoping for the destruction of the cause of the Republic in the rupture of the Union. While Republicans were filled with anxiety at the aspect of affairs, they felt within themselves the glow of patriotism which they knew to be the inspiration of a cause of danger always threatening the best men and most resolute in the determination to defend it. Compromise was left to the ranks of the Republican party believed to be pointing paths of the true Union. Democrats were willing to accept the heresy that "a State cannot be coerced" to keep it. Only Republicans knew that no State party could be without the Union. No State party exemplified with the spirit of patriotism, of devotion to the cause of freedom, of conscience, of culture, and justice, for which the Republican party has been the champion in friend or foe. Soldiers all the world over are the truest and chivalrous men, not to men that were a uniform smeared with the blood of murder. The rank and file of the army of the Union Confederates is the reason why Federal soldiers have with disdain spurn them and avoid them. Progress of Art in England.

THE fortieth annual meeting of the Art Union of London was held recently in Willis' Rooms, and from the report read on that occasion it appears that art, and especially industrial art, is making wonderful progress in England. The report says:

Since the establishment of art schools in this country, under the control of the Science and Art Department of the Privy Council, the progress in the education of the people in this direction has been remarkable, and in the last report of the Council it is stated that in the night classes the number of students has increased to 21,851, and in the elementary schools 200,425 children were instructed. The total number of persons taught drawing, painting, or modeling amounted, in 1874, to 245,782. An evidence of the capacity of our English art student to learn is now to be found in Kensington Museum, filled in what has been called "Lambeth Pottery." A most interesting collection of original works in pottery, designed by the Director and students of the Lambeth School of Art, has been for some time on view at Messrs. Howell & James's gallery, in Regent street, London. The works by the students in designing pottery arose with Messrs. Doulton, of Lambeth, who, while employing the industry and talent of the people in the manufacture of their stoneware, gave them free permission to visit their potters and watch the work from the time it left the shed till its final removal from the kilns. The pupils eagerly availed themselves of this permission, and they profited so thoroughly by the opportunity afforded them that in a short time they took the predictions of their own hearts as scientifically as practised workmen, and have produced some vases, plaques, and ornaments that would not have disgraced the best days of Derby or Chelsea. At this carefully managed school, in addition to the usual routine of drawing from models, and other studies, there is, indeed, suddenly springing up a new and important branch of art that will soon enable us to dispense with the necessity of foreign aid in that the young lady who, by reason of the help of her father's purse, is able to make the designs for the vases, shall be assisted by a young artisan, who, after a long day's work at the bench, will be glad to produce the same effect. Therefore drunkenness is death, and death is drunkenness."

"I understand, observed his Honor.

"You intend to put in the plea that you were dead instead of drunk"

"Distinctly, perfectly," bowed the old man.

"Well, the law covers both cases. If you were drunk it is a punishable offense. If you were dead, I can legally dispose of the body. What do you say to sixty days in the county?

"The human system is made up of bones, muscles, cartilages, lime, salt, leather, iron and several other articles," replied the philosopher, avoiding a reply to the question.

"Your system was mostly made up of whisky last night," answered the court, "and leaving danced you must now pay the fiddler."

"Theoretically, practically, virtually and directly, I'll not pay any fiddler one red cent," bluntly exclaimed the philosopher.

"Ah! you jump from philosophy to sass!" remarked the court. "Even if you were a philosopher I should send you up. There's more philosophy than clean shirts nowadays, and it is my candid opinion that a good smoked ham will outweigh all the philosophy from Newton's time down to yours. I make it sixty days in the low ground for you."

"Speaking of ham," slowly answered the old man, "can you inform me why the art of frogging parties is obsolete?"

"I can inform you that you had better go into the corridor and take a seat," was the decisive answer, and the philosopher was seen seated in the nine new benches.—Free Press.

The Philosopher in the Detroit Police Court.

IF a seldom that a philosopher gets drunk, if it might be safer to say that it is seldom a philosopher is arrested for being drunk. The officers got hold of one yesterday. Long, lank, seedy clothes, one boot and one shoe, no collar and a pro found look. When High opened the door of his cell and recognized him out, the philosopher inquired:

"Why do men degrade themselves in the look of the lower creation?"

"Don't ask me any conundrums," gasped the old janitor, wiping the sweat from his face. "Here I've worked like a nox all the morning, and now I've got to feed around for an hour with you drunk ards."

"The human body is said to be a machine," continued the old man, "but—"

But High walked him out.

"Been to the Centennial?" asked his Honor.

"What has the Centennial to do with transmigration?" inquired the philosopher.

That's where he had the Cantt on the hip.

"Fermented liquor is said to degrade a person," continued the philosopher, opening his hands. "They say so because it stupefies the brain, mustrings the nerves and relaxes the muscles. It doesn't disturb the principle of reason and makes it act more clearly. Therefore drunkenness is death, and death is drunkenness."

"I understand," observed his Honor.

"You intend to put in the plea that you were dead instead of drunk"

"Distinctly, perfectly," bowed the old man.

"Well, the law covers both cases. If you were drunk it is a punishable offense. If you were dead, I can legally dispose of the body. What do you say to sixty days in the county?

Forests.

THE following letter, from the Chairman of the Forest Committee of the American Institute, was read before that body at their meeting last week. It gives the most pertinent reasons for the masses of the people seeking to be a very practical turn to give the forest question, now so generally discussed throughout the country:

STATEN ISLAND, CAPE MAY CO., N. J., May 19, 1876.

HON. N. C. ELY, President Farmers' Club, American Institute, N. Y.—DEAR SIR: We believe the subject of "Firepond Houses" is to be recognized as a most essentially practical one in the near future. Independent of the humane and economic issues directly involved, the reduction of death on the forest wealth is very soon to be regarded as an important matter. Already our views expressed on this subject, as set forth in our Paper, No. 22, read before the Society, have been warmly commended by some of the first architects in the country. We are confident some of our friends will soon try the experiment of erecting Firepond cottages.

These cottages will be a success, and by their example spread the good and merciful work. That buildings literally fireproof cannot be constructed, as suggested by some, is an architectural heresy. The security which it is possible to realize in the most combustible structures half a favorable illustration in the great fire at the Smithsonian Institution, at Washington, D. C., a few years ago. We have the admirable conflagration raging its house, and almost moaned in spirit as we thought of the loss science would suffer in the destruction of the finest collection, in point of quality, of natural history specimens on the continent. The immense system of heating, however, in was then progressing. When the smoke and flame cleared away from the ruins, it was found that the fireproof principle had been fully tested, and that the building, however, was fireproof. When the smoke and flame cleared away from the ruins, it was found that the fireproof principle had been fully tested, and that the building, however, was fireproof. When the smoke and flame cleared away from the ruins, it was found that the fireproof principle had been fully tested, and that the building, however, was fireproof.

The Spring Bonnet Question.

IN the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love, but in the spring a woman's fancy turns to thoughts of bonnets. If women possessed the privilege of suffrage, the constitutional amendment which would make bonnets a crime would be carried by a unanimous vote. At that period of the year the questions involved in the selection of a bonnet engross and trammel up all other questions. Whether Turkey is likely to be dismembered, whether Bristow or Blaine shall be President, whether the people will not perceive at church that Mrs. Smith's bonnet is the most beautiful of all, with a feather on each side and, perhaps one in the middle. These issues sink into insignificance and the sanctuary upon the day when such a discovery is made. The average woman returns home with a feeling strong upon her that there are some trials in life which can hardly be reached even by the consolations of religion.

The direst agony usually is over when the season is thus far advanced; but the sum of misery that yet remains in the discomfort with the spring bonnet as it is in its final form is merely dreadful to contemplate. What the remedy shall be only female philosophers can decide. Short bareheadedness would seem to offer permanent relief, and to the tyrant man there would appear to be very little risk in the physical health in a change from a bonnet that is planned to the extreme rear of the back hair to no bonnet at all. But the headdress of some kind really seems regarded as a necessity, perhaps a compromise might be made at some comfortable point between the folded towel worn upon the head by the Italian peasant woman and the gorgeous mass of flowers, fripery and fol-de-rol which form the vexatious spring bonnet of the woman of America.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

—A young lady of intelligence and refinement, who has been under treatment at the Baltimore Hospital for a disease which has baffled the skill of several eminent physicians, has drawn a will, in which she requests that her body may be subjected to a post-mortem examination for the benefit of science, and that the proceeds of her estate be applied in like manner to the relief of persons who shall be likewise afflicted in the future.

—A young clergyman seems to have compressed the whole body of his sermon on "deeds" into the following: "Oh, my brethren, the sweetest statement may be sweet as nothing, and the softest air of all countries encircle a throat that has many a bitter pill to swallow."

Shattered Constitutions Rebuilt.

IN the use of a wholesome botanical blood purifier and invigorator a shattered constitution. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are not only extensively and widely used, but they rectify with most satisfactory promptness the disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels which are incompatible with a reform of the general health. When the system is enfeebled by disease, by the waste and tear of nerve force, by exhaustion consequent upon late hours and hard living, by overwork and by sedentary habits, the Bitters are the most reliable medicinal agent with which to restore such shattered and debilitated frames. The new shocked vitality which they infuse into the system is not a mere spasmodic excitement, which they establish among the organs of digestion, secretion and assimilation; but moreover, constitute its most subsequent and natural disease.

Symptoms of Catarrh.

DULL, heavy, dead sensation of the nasal passages, discharge falling into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, acrid, thick and tenacious mucus, purulent, muco-purulent, offensive, etc., etc., according to the stage of the disease, dry, watery, weak, or inflamed eyes, ringing in ears, deafness, hawking and coughing, to clear the throat, expectoration, scabs in nostrils, ulceration, obstruction, offensive breath, impaired sense of smell, taste, hearing, dizziness, mental depression, loss of confidence, a fear of coming events, and lastly, direness, mental degradation, and moral death, that a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any one at one time.

The air of the committee rooms of the Capitol is rank with the sulphurous reckless assertion and scandalous calumny. Investigations of this kind are made to nothing or worse, except to the men who testify. A man who had shot down a soldier who had surrendered, but spun from whom justice is expected. The mist of scandal is lightened that the party which has made itself odious by cruelty and corruption, by fraud and smuggling, to clear the throat, by accusations, scandals, slurs, falsehood, and lastly, direness, mental degradation, and moral death, that a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any one at one time.

When applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, and accompanied with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery as a constitutional treatment, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy produces perfect cures in the worst cases of Catarrh and Bronchial many years' standing. This thorough course of medication combats the only scientific, rational, safe, and successful manner of treating this odious disease that has ever been offered to the afflicted.

—A good story comes from Rome, Ga., and is told by the Courier at that city. A party of gentlemen having sat down to dinner one of them, Col. Wofford, was asked to say grace, and, bowing his head, said: "Lord, make us honest and rich." An editor who was present promptly responded "Amen. Give the Colonel the former, and Thy humble servant the latter, as Thou seest we need, and do it quickly."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

SULPHUR OF POTASSIUM, if placed on the surface of the soil under the plant affected with subjulides or plant lice, will drive all the insects away or destroy them.

RUBBER FRUIT CAKE.—One pound brown sugar, ten eggs, one pound flour, one pound butter, one pound raisins, one pound currants, half pound citron, one teaspoonful baking powder, bake two hours.

FOR SORE EYES.—Take two tablespoonfuls honey, teaspoonful salt, tincture of balsam buds, one tablespoonful, teaspoon full gum pine. Make a paste and put it over the eyes. A thin cloth to go on the eyes first.—Dr. David New Yorker.

CREAM COOKIES.—One teacup of sour cream, one cup of butter, two cups of sugar, two eggs, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a very little water. Mix slightly, and bake in a quick oven. This makes a large batch, and will keep six weeks, if liked.

MARKING INK.—Take one dram of nitrate (lunar caustic), dissolve it in a glass mortar, in double its weight of pure water. This forms the ink. Then dissolve one dram of salts of tartar in one ounce of water, in another vessel; this is the liquid with which the linen must be previously wetted, then allowed to dry and afterward to be written on.

TO SEPARATE honey from wax, put the honeycomb and all in a pan upon a moderately warm stove, adding a tablespoonful of water to each pound of honey. Stir occasionally with a piece of wire by the fingers. Let any one who is dyspeptic try this simple remedy for the butcher at good prices. Cream sugar and butter, add the yolks of eggs, then the whites beaten to a froth, then flour and baking powder, bake in a quick oven.

SPONGE CAKE.—Take a teacup of butter, two pounds of brown sugar, and three eggs, beat all well together, then add a teacup of sweet milk, a tablespoonful of soda in, then two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar, then two and two-thirds cups flour, last of all two cups chopped raisins. Bake in a slow oven, and you will have an excellent cake, and one that will last through last weather. And now allow me to tell you, it raisins are put in a cake the last thing, and stirred only just enough to mix, your raisins will not fall to the bottom of the cake. Use the above recipe—omitting the milk—dissolve soda in a little hot water, and you will have very nice cookies.

Root Pruning Corn.

IN a report of experiments made at Walsharam Farm, Mass., given in the Scientific Farmer, we find some remarks on root pruning corn, which are quite at variance with the belief held by many of our practical farmers. Still we have always contended that cultivating corn late in the season was more beneficial than injurious, even if a few of the longer roots were broken off. But here is what our scientists have to say on the subject:

With reference to the corn crop, to cultivate well is to cultivate close to the growing crop, and this that we saw cut or sever the young rootlets, cause them to branch, and then more completely occupy the interstices of the soil. When the root of an apple tree is cut off, numerous small roots are pushed from the buds latent in the bark on the tree side, and in the place of the removed root we have seen developed numerous fibrous branches which proceed to extend their feeding fibrils into the soil, and we find an immense amount of fresh feeding surface occupying the place of the removed portion, whose functions had become inert through age. In a similar manner with the corn plant, the long, straggling roots which occur in natural course through the root printing are caused to branch, and thus offer a larger feeding surface to the soil than they otherwise would.

That this is so we have reason to believe through a course of experiments on plants growing in water, and in pots during the past winter, as well as from careful observation in the field plants which occupied last year's corn-field. When germinating corn was suspended over a glass of water, the roots were perceived to extend, without developing rootlets, until the nutriment contained in the seed had apparently been exhausted. When this period arrived, root-hairs soon showed themselves on the smooth, white and cylindrical roots appearing first at a distance from the extremity, and developing downward with the growth of the root. When the extremity of the root was nipped off, the effect was to develop the root-hairs on the remaining portion to a large extent, and in many instances the straight root became branched before the experiment was closed, through an inability from inexperience and want of the proper facilities for nourishing the growth in a properly fertilized media.

When the corn was planted in pots, the same effects appeared upon pruning the roots, and likewise whenever the extending roots came plump against the side of the pot. Upon washing the earth away fully from the roots by means of a gentle stream of water, the influence of the pruning in giving the roots a fibrous character was very perceptible.

It was also a matter of observation in the field, that those portions which were the best cultivated, produced the largest crop, and a careful examination of the theories shows beyond question, that under judicious practice, the nearer to the plant and the deeper the cultivator enters the soil, the better the crop—provided common sense is use, and the plant is not killed through following the letter of the law, or the maturity of the crop delayed by its unreasonable practice.

STRANGE as it may seem, we are unable to find, in any of the books and authorities at our disposal, any reference to the root-pruning of annual plants, as a beneficial practice. The widely object of cultivation is given as the stirring and meaning of the soil, it pulverization, and destruction of weeds. Indeed, the mention is occasionally made of the cutting of roots, but it is pronounced most sagely that the benefits of the tillage so far exceed the injury of the root-cutting of the plants, that we must fill, till, fill—the more the better. Yet the secret of the success of the new husbandry so extensively and practiced by Jethro Lull, must be explained by the root printing—the success of the Lords Weedon husbandry, in the hands of its originator and his disciples; and its failure when tried experimentally by Messrs. Liawes, must be explained by the presence of the root printing in the one case, and its absence in the other. The profitableness of drilling of wheat in England over the broadcasting, and the fact that there appears to be no prominent difference between those methods of sowing in many country, may be legitimately ascribed to the root printing caused by the English method of spring hoeing. When we come to the practice of the florist and the gardener, we find them an empirical practice, which, in part, accomplishes the same result, and produces their success.—Rural New Yorker.

TO ALL particularly invalids, spring is a trying season. Indications of sickness should at once be attended to. THAT disease may be caused by allowing the bowels to become constipated and the system to remain in a disordered condition and the disorder has time to develop itself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure is an old and truthful saying. Therefore, we advise all to commence with the commencement now very prevalent—headache, indigestion, disordered liver—want of appetite, nausea, or feverish attack—neither without delay. Schenck's Mandrake Pills. We know of no remedy so harmless and decisive in its action. It does not stricken at the root of the disease and produces a healthy tone to the system. Those who need suffer from any disease arising from a ill ordered condition of the digestive organs will take this excellent medicine when they find the first indications of sickness. Pacific healing home for the summer months should have two or four boxes of these pills with them. They have an almost instantaneous effect. They will relieve the patient of headache in one or two hours, and will rapidly cleanse the flow of accumulating bile, and will effectually prevent a bilious attack. They are sold by all druggists.

6 VERY desirable

Within the memory of a [illegible] city of the dominion of the Methodist Conference, just held, it was declared unwholesome, if not criminal, to smoke, with the divine institution, of human slavery, and ministers who dared preach against it were denounced in the open sessions of the Methodist Conference. Last week a minister was silenced by the General Conference and convicted the reverend delinquent with his sin. He related how he had driven him and upon the slaveholder. Verily the world moves. Let all the people pray some.

General Kilpatrick's [illegible] review of Sherman's Campaign, tells the following story:

Shortly after our army had entered Savannah, a number of clergymen called on General Sherman, and among other questions inquired if they could hold divine services as usual in the churches.

Certainly," said the general, "and we are directed by the Army Regulations to pay due attention to divine service on the Lord's day. My soldiers are not forbidden to attend upon good churches, we will all go."

But, sir," said the clergyman, "we are in the habit of praying for the President and Congress."

"Oh!" said Sherman, "I am well to pray for Jeff Davis, do you?"

"Yes, sir," [illegible] rejoined the clergyman.

"All right," said Sherman, his brows lowering, "pray for him, pray for the devil—pray for both of them, the more needful so much as the worse. Is that all gentlemen.

That was all—but was enough. They had failed to endear General Sherman to make matters of them.

This is not a dangler, but we are for Hon. Thomas White Ferry, of Michigan, for the United States Senate, the term commencing March 4 1877. He has experience. He has statesmanship. He has ability. He is a man who has always stood by the people in the public exercises of his office. He has had the genius of hard labor and attention to duty exhibited to the second power in the nation. He has fairly earned, Paris, earned, consideration as a public servant of twelve years in Washington, having served the first four years on the first being Making the people's interests his own in all things that accrue to the welfare of the State, or nation, the people love him with a devotion that is [illegible] "Investigation" has not even thought of him. "Smirt machines" know their ilk, cannot reach him. Attending always and only to these duties the people seem him there to perform, he is always found in his place, and always at work. Temperate, rational, faithful, unstained and true there is yet only one bigger post tion in which the suffrages of the people can place him. By and by he may reach it. In those like these, the people cannot agree from their contests may who like Senator Ferry are famous alike for purity, worth and works. Grand Rapids Journal.

From every quarter comes reports confirmatory of the bursting of the Black Hills region gold excitement, and of the hardship, danger and suffering which the too sanguine gold seekers have undergone and are undergoing. The Jackson Patriot reports the return of two Black Hiders to that city, who tell terrible stories regarding murders by Indians, and starvation of pioneers. Wm Matthews, who formerly resided in the Black Hills from Jamestown, telegraphs back to Cheyenne Crook, that early city. "Send us $20 for the love of God, there is no work here, we are nearly starving to death." Several speculators then thereby report substantially the same thing from the Black Hills country and Messrs Powell and Jamison who went from the vicinity of Grand Rapids to the front up Richmond, have back their brothers are plenty, and that the Black Hills region is a good place to stay at a man that [illegible] writing Bird, during [illegible] and holding on to his scalp with both hands." Such reports as these ought to cure the Black Hills fever.

One of the noticeable features in connection with Machinac, the 200 excitements there is being laid at the fort For, almost a hundred years, the walls of the military defense has looked, frowningly, upon the surrounding region. The appearance of the pile has long been decidedly venerable, in fact more venerable than it really is. Until lately the whole seemed tending to positive disintegration. The buildings were dilapidated; the foundations seemed wear; of supporting the ungenial mass. All the surroundings had taken a dreary look, being only relieved of its dreariness as the general ruinous old vegetation wrought out its brief bright and lasting transformations. A great change is now being effected. The appropriations, that have been made have restored the present Commandant to give a different appearance, gives birth, to the whole. Or rather we may say the the [illegible] put to its lasting command, are now being more rapidly advanced.

It will not be long before the garrison will show itself to have become as the roughly transformed, that it will have but all but old stamped tasks, and has a place abounding in gratifying attractions. The importance to the Post must, necessarily, be great enhanced by its present exhibition of another company.—Mackinac Journal.

THE NEWS.

ACCORDING to a London dispatch of the 27th, the Queen of England had arranged to marry Prince Arthur to a daughter of the ex King of Hanover. Rumors of the serious illness of the Prince of Wales preceded this London, and something like a panic occurred on the Stock Exchange.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch of the 27th says without inquiry into the origin of the Salonica outrage had shown that the American Consul was absent when the Bulgarian gulf arrived, and that his brother declared he r. Official telegrams had been received which stated that the insurrection in Bulgaria had been entirely satisfied, and that military operations in that province had been stopped.

A SAN SEBASTIAN (Spain) telegram of the 27th says a state of siege had been declared throughout the Basque provinces and Navarre.

According to London dispatches of the 28th, England was making extensive preparations for war.

A SECOND telegram of the 28th says four more of the parties concerned in the recent murder of the Consuls had been sentenced to banishment and thirteen to various terms of penal servitude.

G. M. D. Hosse, a well known editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, was instantly killed on the night of the 29th by being run over by a locomotive on the Little Miami Railroad, near Cincinnati.

A COMPANY of United States troops has been ordered to Custer City for the protection of the miners against the Indians.

As ex-Doorkeeper of the House, named Lawrence Barney, appeared before the Cipher Investigation Committee on the 29th, and swore that he had paid $450 to Speaker Kerr in 1866 for the appointment of Augustus F. Green to a vacant lieutenancy. Upon minor points the witness was forgetful, but he stuck most persistently to the main assertion that the money was paid for the appointment. Mr. Kerr denied knowing Barney, and most solemnly asserted that not a dollar had passed between them in return to by the witness.

The Secretary of the Treasury has received the retirement of $46,500 of legal tenders, that being eighty per cent. of the National Bank circulation issued during May. This leaves the outstanding green back circulation at $370,125,068.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean of the 29th says: "Mr. B. E. K. Stewart, a well known lawyer of this city, received the other day a letter from his brother, Mr. J. H. Stewart, who has been in the Black Hills for the last four weeks, which gives a favorable account of the progress of mining operations. He says: 'They are mining seventy-five miles from Custer City, on Benglewood Creek, where they have very rich diggings. Provisions plenty of gold. They find considerable difficulty in securing claims. The miners have not seen an Indian. Game is very plenty. I think, though it is evident there are plenty of Indians around, two of their horses having been stolen.' Mr. Stewart is known here as a man of truth and his above statement will therefore carry weight with it."

DEPUTY DEBS, of St. Louis, announces that he has obtained judgments on the bonds of distillers arraigned for violation of the Revenue law to the amount of $1,000,000. He had also collected $10,000 in back taxes.

CONSTANTINOPLE dispatches of the 30th ult say the Sultan Abdul Aziz had been forced to abdicate. His brother Prince Murad Effendi, had succeeded to the throne. The dethroned Sultan was kept under guard in a kiosque in his seraglio. Both Christians and Mussulmen were greatly pleased at the change, and perfect tranquility prevailed. It was believed that the new condition of affairs would greatly facilitate the settlement of the Eastern difficulties. The new Sultan had accepted fifty-seven propositions submitted to him by the Softas, viz. The institution of the permanent assembly of notables, abolition of the capitation tax, and equalization of the civil list to 3,000,000 piastres.

A VERY destructive conflagration occurred at Quebec, Canada, on the 30th ult. The fire started in the lower portion of what are known as the St. Louis suburbs, then southerly to the Grand Allee and northerly to the third street south of St. John street. Four thousand houses were destroyed, involving a loss of about $1,000,000.

DECORATION DAY (May 30) was appropriately observed at the North and West and in many portions of the South.

THE American Sunday-school Union held its fifty-second anniversary at Philadelphia on the 30th ult. The receipts for the past year shows that 1,236 new schools were formed, and 3,216 other schools visited and aided, which have a total membership of 298,245.

THE Rhode Island General Assembly met on the 30th ult. The Counting Committee reported J. R. Addeman elected Secretary of State and no choice for other State officers. The Grand Committee then re-elected Gov. Lippitt, Lieut.-Gov. Sisson, Attorney Sayles, and Treasurer Samuel Clark.

MRS. WILLIAM MCNAMAR, of Logansport, Ind., while building a fire on the 29th ult., used kerosene oil. She was fatally burned.

The passenger fares on the railroad lines to the East have been reduced to the following figures: Between Chicago and Boston, $17; New York, $16; Buffalo, $12; Philadelphia, $15 50. A corresponding reduction has been made between St. Louis, Cincinnati, etc., and the above named Eastern points.

THREE park-packing houses in Louisville, Ky., have suspended recently, with aggregate liabilities of about $1,000,000.

A VIENNA newspaper of the 31st ult says the dethronement of Abdul Aziz was affected by a resolution of the ministry. A rumor prevailed in Constantinople that the ex-Sultan had suddenly fled from Dolmabagtche palace. Other rumors had it that he had been strangled. A Berlin dispatch to the London Times of the same date says Servia had loaned a decree closing all schools and courts, and that war with Turkey was imminent.

A LONDON telegram of the 31st ult says that an application had been made by the Government to have Winslow again released until after June 15.

THE Republican members of the Rhode Island General Assembly, in caucus on the 31st ult., nominated Henry B. Anthony for re-election to the United States Senate.

THE Missouri Democratic State Convention assembled at Jefferson City on the 31st ult, and elected delegates to the National Convention who favor the resumption of specie payments. A platform was adopted favoring a speedy return to specie payments.

THE Louisiana Republican State Convention, in session at New Orleans, adopted resolutions favoring the establishment of a system of Federal finance which will bring about a steady, speedy and permanent return to specie payments. Delegates were chosen to the National Convention.

THE Tennessee Democratic State Convention met at Nashville on the 31st ult., and elected delegates to the National Convention. It is supposed that fifteen out of the seventeen chosen are for Hendricks for President. The resolutions oppose contraction, favor resumption of specie payments whenever it can be effected without injury to the business interests of the country, and the unconditional repeal of the Resumption act of 1875.

THE Virginia Conservative State Convention met at Richmond on the 31st ult., and elected Tilden delegates to the National Convention.

THE Iowa Republican State Convention met at Des Moines on the 31st ult., and nominated a State ticket mainly composed of the present incumbents. Delegates were chosen to the National Convention and resolutions adopted, among others, advocating the gradual resumption of specie payment by continuing and steadily adding to that direction, recognizing in James G. Blaine one well worthy to be nominated for President by the National Convention, and instructing the delegates to vote as a unit. The delegation is understood to be largely in favor of Mr. Blaine's nomination.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

A HEARTRENDING accident recently occurred at Calumet, on the Hecla & Torch Lake Railroad, which caused the instant death of Joseph Schafer. It seems that he, enough after just ascending from his work and uncoupled, was making his way to the changing house across the railroad. The cars of this road were cut loose from the engine and were coming down a grade. He saw them coming, but thought he had plenty of time to cross the road, so he attempted to run across, but his foot catching in a frog, he in attempting to release it fell across the rail and the whole train of cars passed over his body, instantly mangling it and completely severing the head from the body.

A FIRE on the 27th, at Bay City, destroyed the warehouse adjoining Austin & Merrill's sawmill property, Schermerhorn's warehouse and the Occidental Landing; a valuable boarding house, and damaged a new steamer, and two barges quite severely. The loss by fire, smoke and water is $18,000.

JOHN TAYLOR, an old resident of Grass Lake, while standing in front of his house, on the morning of the 29th ult., during a storm, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. Members of the family were standing around at the time, and some were badly shocked, but not seriously injured.

IN the morning of the 29th ult., a fatal and shocking accident occurred at the Edwards Mine, Hamtramck, resulting in the instant death of a miner named Schmitz, and seriously injuring two Italians named Squiel. Schmitz was literally torn to pieces, and the Italians' clothes ripped from them in a miraculous manner. The three were at work drilling. After getting a few feet the drill struck a pocket which contained a quantity of nitro-glycerine, which exploded, with the above results.

A DESTRUCTIVE fire occurred at Midland on the 29th, which destroyed Findlater's and Mather's hotels, the Presbyterian church and many other buildings. Four business blocks were completely burned away, and two others partially. The fire caught in a barn containing new Findlater's hotel, about 5 o'clock p. m. A strong breeze was blowing from the southeast, which, fanning the flames, carried the conflagration in a course of destruction with rapidity. A few minutes after the Findlater House took fire, a frame cottage, was to adjoin, and shortly after the new three-block was burning. The fire spread from block to block, and in less than two blocks on each side of the street were a mass of smouldering ruins. Among the buildings burned were the Post Office, Hotel, owned by Alex. Findlater, the St. James, owned by Mr. Mather, the Bay City Wood Working Company's mill, the Methodist, Presbyterian and Episcopal churches, the Odd Fellows' hall, two blacksmithshops, the Presbyterian parsonage, several livery stables, numerous stores, the Masonic and Odd Fellows' halls

OUR RADIA LETTER.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, June 3, 1876.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The American people who, heretofore, have never seemed to have time for holidays, and who, for a century, had not more than two or three days in the year besides Sundays when they could stop work without their conscience pricking them, are now rapidly growing toward the condition of older nations in this regard. Were any argument necessary to support this assertion the facts in connection with Decoration Day would furnish it. When the 30th of May was set apart for the purpose indicated it was rather for a private and unostentatious tribute to the memory of friends and relations who fell in the late war. But with the increasing need for recreation which the nation has felt, the occasion has been nursed and developed into a regular gala-day, with processions, flags, bands of music and all the paraphernalia of public demonstration. Of course, this change is more marked in the other parts of the country, and, probably, most of all here in New York.

On last Tuesday the celebration was more showy and also more comprehensive than ever before. The fact of its being the Centennial year gave an opportunity for greater ceremony than usual, which was improved by beautifully decorating the graves of 1812 and even of the Revolution—what few still remain to us,—by a profuse display of bunting and by a procession to Green wood, which was nearly an hour and a half in passing a given point. The colossal bronze statues of Washington and Lincoln in Union Square were covered with evergreens and flowers, the Centennial character of the day being shown by the much greater attention paid to the former. Speeches and music were also given at the same place, and business throughout town quite generally suspended.

An occasion of great interest to the curious was the recent funeral of an eccentric Hungarian nobleman, Baron de Palm, who died ten days ago at one of our city hospitals. His body was embalmed by his order, and after being kept a week was taken to Masonic Hall where funeral services were held according to some ancient pagan ritual by the heathen society of Theosophists, to which the deceased belonged, and to whom he left all his property. After the incense burning and other wierd ceremonies the body was removed by the society, by whom it is whispered, it is to be burnt after the ancient fashion.

Commodore Vanderbilt is paying one of the penalties of prominence. Hovering as he is, between life and death, his house is constantly besieged by reporters and messengers from the stock exchange all eager to speculate on the old man's dying breath. The Commodore was 82 years old last Saturday, but was too feeble to receive his own family.

PANAMA-RAMA, June 5.

If a fellow could be shut up in say a hundred square feet of the Exposition, somewhere, and forbidden to stir out of that enclosure under pain of death till he had written a description thereof then there might be some chance of his holding himself down to anything long enough to get it on to paper. But, unfortunately, there are no friendly jailors to hold me still, and as a consequence, I roam wildly about at each visit, seeing such a multiplicity of things that my feeble intellect is weighed down by an overpowering sense of its own inability to properly tackle the subject.

The main building is at last in pretty good shape, the Russian exhibit, which was about the tardiest of the lot, having arrived and being nearly set up. The other halls are well filled and are in fine shape, with the exception of those containing the Art Department, where the delay in exhibits and the culpable neglect of the authorities in placing the necessary guards about the paintings and statuary has worked terrible mischief.

The number of tickets issued to the noble army of deadheads is quite large (probably nearly 20,000 in all), and by being transferred by the holders to parties who have no right to the courtesy, have reduced the receipts quite up to zero. To remedy this evil the Commissioners have hit upon the plan of making the free list a sort of "Rogue's Gallery," and in pursuance thereof have ordered that after a certain day no free pass will be recognized which does not have attached to it the photograph of the person to whom it is issued. This will put an effectual quietus upon the use of the same pass by several persons. A photographer outside the grounds is doing a fine trade in consequence, taking pictures at lightning speed, in the most business like manner possible. The string of people standing outside his little establishment is an interesting sight. Exhibitors, employes, reporters and correspondents, male and female, all have to fall into line and are successively disposed of at 50 cents a head, with neatness and despatch. This essentially Yankee idea is a pretty good one and will save a good deal of money to the commissioners' coffers.

Speaking of which reminds me to say that the financial outlook of the enterprise is already brightening. The average of cash admissions during the last fourteen days is nearly four times as large as those to the Vienna Exposition, during the same time and over two and a half times as large as the corresponding figures for the Paris Exhibition of nine. This average is constantly improving and will continue to improve.

Decoration Day was pretty generally observed here. The great feature of the week was the grand parade of the Knights Templar on the 1st, when 7,000 of the Knights were in line, forming an imposing spectacle.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fortified.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. One question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease that is man to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

The Charge Against Speaker Kerr.

There is something very dreadful in the directness and circumstantiality of the charge laid by Barney, relative to his having paid Speaker Kerr $4500 during the Johnson Administration to secure the appointment of a navy agent to Dresden, in New York; to bring Mr. Kerr into elsewhere enjoyed the reputation of an honest man, and his election as Speaker has been regarded as the fairest thing which the Democrats in Congress have done. If he be successfully impeached as a Congressional bribe-taker and office-broker, his downfall will be as much of a National disgrace as was that of Belknap. We have no desire to make party capital out of this affair. We sincerely hope that Speaker Kerr may be able to vindicate himself; but the conviction is almost forced upon us that he loses the money. The story which Barney tells is too explicit and too straightforward to pass for an invention, and there is no shadow of a reason or motive for inventing it. He says that Green (millionaire Horace) $4[illegible] to Kerr, and that Kerr afterward $4[illegible] to Barney, that he handed the $4500 to Kerr, who put it in his pocket, and that Green, after he got his appointment and had gone home, remitted Barney the forty dollars he had added Mr. Kerr's friends claim that Barney having represented to Green that he had paid the money to Kerr, now swears through to protect himself. As against this, it will be regarded as strange that Kerr should have gone outside his own district and State to make this army appointment after his appointment had failed. Tuesday Barney gave his testimony in the presence of Kerr, and nothing occurred, though subpoked as a searching cross-examination. Barney, it appears, was not examined before the committee, but was reluctantly compelled to tell the story, and unless Mr. Kerr can find some reason to demonstrate that he received the money at that time, and that Barney is guessing at credit, we do not see how Congress can decently avoid the duty of expelling their Speaker.—National Republican.

The case seems worth remembering.—Brighton Magazine.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

The frontier telegraph line in Texas, from Denison, via Jackson, Concho, San Antonio and Eagle Pass, to Brownsville, a distance of 1,020 miles, is now complete.

The largest report from Alaska is that vegetation is luxuriant, the Yukon River navigable for 1,400 miles, the soil fine, the fisheries practically inexhaustible, and the climate semi-continental in character.

The French oyster plantations have proved wonderfully successful. Those at Marennes, which in 1867 yielded only 25,000,000 oysters, last year gave 21,286,000, and have produced this season 27,-000,000.

Georgia now occupies the ninth place in the table of cotton-manufacturing States. The status of the industry in all its ascending grades, in Pennsylvania, New York, Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

To convince the dangers arising from dampness in brick buildings a French architect, M. Sebille, has patented a simple and inexpensive process for injecting into them, through either cold mortar joints, with the lazy residue from the manufacture of illuminating gas. Brick thus prepared is said to be rendered absolutely water-proof.

From a recent published statement it appears that so far as can be gathered from statistics, the country will soon bring American tonnage as follows: 2,350 sailing vessels of 2,512,876 tons; 580 steamers of 370,375 tons—making a fleet of 2,135 vessels and 3,220,457 tons. Add to these the lake and river tonnage, and the figures would be nearly doubled. The aggregate number of American vessels on the ocean, our lakes and rivers, is estimated at 31,925, with a tonnage of about 5,000,000 tons. New York is supposed to have the most tons of shipping—1,148,-000—Maine next, Massachusetts next and Pennsylvania next.

An experiment is being tried in New Zealand, to determine how long an eel will live without eating. An injured specimen was placed in a tank along with others, for the convenience of keeping. The tank was perfectly tight, with the exception of the partly-perforated bottom. The injured eel, from its unsound condition, was always left when a draft was made upon the contents of the tank. The supply of eels was kept up by continual additions, and, as time went on, the individual exceptionally sparse, growing thinner and thinner, was still allowed to remain uneaught. It is now seven years since the eel has been fed, and, though "perfectly transparent and quite white, it is to all appearances, healthy and lively enough."

Several foreign naval powers are directing their attention to the practicability of establishing telegraph stations in mid-ocean, by which messages can be sent from one part of the sea along the line of the cable to the terminal point on shore, and vice versa, so that communication with iron-clads, mail steamers and other vessels, when out at sea, may be established. One invention for carrying out this scheme consists of a hollow sectional column with a base plate attached by ball and socket joint, which is lowered overboard to the water and anchored rigidly to the ground. The branch cable is coiled in the main cable and clipped along the column to the surface of the water, to be there connected with instruments on board the vessels. By this invention it is proposed to control naval and strategical movements, while a ship in distress could communicate the exact position, the nature of her troubles, and thus procure assistance.

Egyptian Birds and Animals.

It is worthy of notice that among the feathered and four-legged animals described by the ancient Egyptians, ducks are not represented; moreover, it may be observed that there are no data to show that the domestic fowl was known to the ancient Egyptians. The object so called on the cartouche of the builder of the Great Pyramid resembles a eagle, both in appearance and figure, but it might be the young of the quail, which is still plentiful throughout the cultivated districts. There is a picture on one of the tombs, and another in the British Museum, where geese, quail, and evidently ducks are being salted and preserved for future use. Pigeons, both wild and domesticated, have been plentiful in Egypt from very early times. The common rock-pigeon (Columba livia) is generally distributed, and its conquest of the dovecot often returns to the rocky wilds. Every town of any pretensions has a public pigeon house, more on account of the economic value of the manure than for the birds. At Sheet it is a lively scene to sit in your boat and watch them swarming around the houses and settling on the tops of palm trees or, like seagulls, hovering over the river for the purpose of picking up the grain thrown overboard. The traveler inquisitive on points connected with natural history will do well to examine the walls of the Indian temple on the island of Medinet Habou, there is observed a very vivid representation of the combat of the warrior monarch, Ramses III. (B. C. 1200). Here, among all the fish, flitting of the times, are shown pintails in their robes letting off carrier-pigeons, which seem fully conscious of the doings of the event to distant points—indeed, Egyptologists assert that there are notices in ancient papyrus manuscripts of homing pigeons having been used in Egypt as articles of food no less than 3,000 years, and upwards, before the birth of Christ, thus testifying to the long domestication of the pigeon. The turtle-dove (C. Senegalensis) is universally distributed over the habitable parts of Egypt and Nubia, and breeds in the middle of the large towns. When the ancients wished to represent a "silly woman," they drew a bird, since which neither the above nor the pigeon have been found embalmed. The monkeys were sacred to the god Thoth, supposed to teach the Egyptians the sciences; the dog-faced ape (Simia hamadryas) a native of Ethiopia, from whence it was probably obtained, appears constantly in the hieroglyphic writings, as well as in the pictures and statues, the visage in the latter being a sacred dog, bell-monkey. The other is the little green monkey of Ethiopia; both are common in mummies. The presence of the cynocephalus (Simia sphinx) a native of Ethiopia, whence it was probably obtained in mummies

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. Hence, it stands as wholly unlike, as it is superior to, all other bitters.

What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS? Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers in health. They are the great blood purifier and a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the wonderful cathartic and curative properties of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease.

No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones have not been destroyed by mineral poisons or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offspring of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove to any sufferer its curative effect, and a trial will convince the most skeptical of its merits.

For Inflammatory, Chronic, Rheumatism and Gout, Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral organs in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritive, Laxative, Counter-Irritant, Sedative, Rubefacient, Stimulant, Alterative and Tonic, thus combining in one medicine the most curative principles of the vegetable kingdom.

DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are the best remedy in the world for all diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs.

For Clearing the Blood, whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores, cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworm, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous that there is no imposition.

Cleanse the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Pin, Tape and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. For full directions, read carefully the circular around each bottle, printed in four languages.

DR. A. TRASK'S

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medicinal properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined, with the age of seventy years, succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a remedy, in the form of an extract, the power of which in arresting disease is truly wonderful. This extract is the basis of Medicines, and is known as Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

His discovery consists in a combination of the several Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the case of diseases of the skin, has come to the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its merits.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained from any other source.

Such is the power of this combination, that there is scarcely a disease to which the human system is subject, but what is overcome by its searching influence. Even the most inveterate cases of Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Ulcers, Boils, Carbuncles, Scurvy, Itch, Mosquito Bites, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, Sore Throat, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the Side, Chest, Limbs and Joints, Rheumatic Pains, Female Irregularities, Leucorrhœa, Incipient Consumption, Scrofulous Humors in the Blood, Mercurial Diseases, Blood Poisoning, Diseases arising from Impure Blood, Fever Sores, Scrofula, Old Sores, Erysipelas, Blotches, Pimples on the Face or Breast, Burns, Scalds, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Inflammation, Boils, Carbuncles, Scurvy, Itch, Mosquito Bites, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, Liver Complaint, and Diseases caused by Mercury, Impure Blood, Bad Habits, Change of Climate, Water, Diet, Etc.

For Dyspepsia or Impure Blood, Fever Sores, Scrofula, Old Sores, Erysipelas, Blotches, Pimples on the Face or Breast, Burns, Scalds, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Inflammation, Boils, Carbuncles, Scurvy, Itch, Mosquito Bites, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, Liver Complaint, and Diseases caused by Mercury, Impure Blood, Bad Habits, Change of Climate, Water, Diet, Etc.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Ulcerations or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In thirty-nine cases out of a hundred it will afford entire relief in Bronchial and Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.

Affections of the Spine, Hip Disease, Lameness, Pleuritic Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Infantum, Fever Sore Throat, Sore Eyes, Sore Head, Scrofula, Sore Legs, Fever Sores, Piles, Rheumatism, Inflammation, Fever Sores, Scrofula, Sore Throat, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Summer Complaint, Dropsy, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurvy, Humors, Neuralgia, Kidney Complaints, Female Weakness, Barrenness, Irritation, Prolapsus, Painful Menstruation, Ulceration of the Womb, Leucorrhœa, Fits, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Impotency, Nervous Affections, Lumbago, Pain in the Back, Kidneys, Spermatorrhœa, Seminal Emissions, Sexual Debility, Premature Decline in Males, Involuntary Discharges, Spermatic Diseases, Impotency, Barrenness, Dimness of Vision, Premature Old Age, Wasting of the Organs, General Debility, Physical Incapacity

OUR RADIN LETTER.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, June 9 1876.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

And now comes the season when, if you want to see any New Yorker who is anybody you can't find him or her, as the case may be. Mrs. Grundy says that if you are anybody you must not be in New York for the next three months at the very least; so if Paterfamilias, owing to hard times, failing stocks or misplaced bets on base ball or mustang riding, pleads a lack of the $ necessary to take a cottage at Newport, or settle the family at Saratoga or Long Branch or Cape May or the Centennial for the season, Masterfamilias draws down the corners of her mouth with ominous determination, has the front blinds closed with a bang, jerks down the shades with her own hands, locks the front door and pockets the key, gives Paterfamilias his breakfast in the kitchen, and after sending him out the back way to seek the "nasty old office," through byways and alleys, sits down to cogitate with her daughters over the brutality of men generally and of the head of that family in particular. The accumulation of dust on the front steps and door plate is thereto forward a thing to be encouraged, and annoying Individuals with the girl next door dare to breathe aught of the true state of the case, the places that knew her would straightway know her no more.

Thus it is that only we unfortunate scribblers are supposed to show our heads in the city this hot weather. But for us there is no respite, and even in these days when a fellow feels like punching the marrow out of his bones to get a draft through them we have to be dodging about with true newspaper ubiquity, gathering sunstroke for ourselves and news for an insatiable public. With which bid for sympathy permit me to offer you a few disjointed facts, placing first the coolest ones I can think of.

The two public swimming baths which the city boasts have been opened this week and are gratefully appreciated by the few who find admission there to. In a city of this size, which is so surrounded with water the inadequacy of these institutions is simply shameful.

Two baths of the size of these are merely an aggravation to the quarter of a million people who should and would use this great sanitary appliance.

We have suffered a municipal bereavement in the death of the second of the two white wishes recently brought down from the coast of Labrador for Coup's Aquarium. One of these animals, which were the first ever known to be taken alive, died shortly after their arrival, and now the second one has followed. Nothing daunted, Mr Coup has this week dispatched another expedition to Labrador for a duplicate monster. Extra care is to be taken of their next prize. Instead of letting him beat himself to death in a rank, it is proposed so tow him down at least part of the way, by river or canal. Who wouldn't be a white whale this weather.

It was generally supposed that the old "Ring serpent was pretty thoroughly killed, but there is a little life in the tail yet. The wiggle attracts notice this time in the suit of the widow of the Ring architect, Kellum to recover his commission of three per cent, on $5,500,000, the alleged cost of the famous Court House, which furnished the daily bread of those industrious and self-sacrificing patriots, Tweed, Connolly & Co. for several years. This cream, which amounted to some $240,000 was prosecuted with vigor, until the city, altogether the testimony ran, over $2,000,000, blurted at suing Kellum to recover the amount it had lost through the architect's villiany or incompetence, when the widow "folded her tents like the Arabs, and as silently stole away," finding that that was all she could steal.

The most distinguished stranger in New York at present is Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, grand nephew of the first and nephew of the second Emperor himself showing the hereditary instincts by his brilliant record as Colonel in the French army in Egypt. He is a tall, striking looking man of middle age, distinguished and of fine presence, altogether worthy, in appearance at least, of the illustrious name he bears. Col. Bonaparte, who intends visiting the Centennial and then passing the summer at Newport, is now staying with his family at Westminster, one of the most quietly elegant hotels on this continent and the one especially sought by men of prominence in literature, science, and art.

Before was the New York home of the lamented Dickens and the Witch College during his recent visit to this country, and here during their sojourn in the metropolis may always be found Booth or the great English lecturer and satirist, our own John B Gough and scores of others among the class whom men delight to honor.

PHILADELPHIA, June 10

I find the warm weather is by no means confined to New York but is breathing its hot breath over the perspiring mass of cosmopolitan humanity which is doing up the Centennial in white vests, muslin dresses, julep and cobblers. Still it isn't so bad as you might imagine out at the grounds themselves. The Centennial promises to be so spacious that the crowd is not troublesome and the location so far from the city proper and so much high ground as to catch every stray breeze, is as favorable a one for comfort as I have yet found in either city.

The week has not been especially eventful here, matters having settled down into something very like completeness, and the business and pleasure of sight seeing has gone on monotonously and in the regular groove.

Several steam engines have been started in Agricultural Hall, and by the time this reaches you power will doubtless have been applied to the machinery therein contained, and the clatter of the fanning mill, the vicious jigger of the mower, and the long sweep of the clatter of the reaper will make the cultivon the "still life" scene which it has hitherto presented.

One of the handsomest shows in this building is Brazil's display. Two thirds of her enormous territory. Among other things is a splendid collection of tobaccos, raw and manufactured and samples of various wines and liquors now on sale at the Brazilian Commissioners, naturally anxious to establish an export trade to this country, have determined to take and treat out to prospective dealers any orders for those wines or which any be given them. As a consequence the number of buyers who apply for a taste of the samples is so great as to cause the Brazilians to wonder at the unanimity of America in their desire who wish to become importers.

Dom Pedro's realm, by the way, has probably the most striking position in all the main building. It is as elaborated and splendid as the rich gold and silver can make it. The canopy is indeed prevailingly blue, covered with filagree work and red, blue green, white and gold coloring, so tastefully, gaudy.—The exhibits within this space are in keeping with the gorgeous character of its canopy. A representation, consisting of groups of dolls of feather flowers, bird's nesting many of the beautiful species that grow within the empire, a collection of tastefully designed canes and many other articles of native manufacture are indeed prevailing, but are covered with filagree work and red, blue green, white and gold coloring, so tastefully gaudy.—The exhibits within this space are in keeping with the gorgeous character of its canopy. Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretion of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Painting and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Typesetters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease that is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

SCHOOLING IN THE LANE.

The dame was the dominie's sister,
And with rod in her hand she'd appear,
When in the lane the infantile press,
To commit unto all day they.

I see the sweet-scented primroses peeping,
Where spring's fresh breezes do blow,
And the glorious gold and green,
Where the golden cowslips grow.

I see the drooping roses that
From tangled hedgerows to the ground,
Where the chanters swell and fall
On fond love notes, all around.

And how among the shade was,
Where the grass was green and cool,
Entwined, I listened to the talk
That each held my heart's rule.

In days when birds began to sing,
In the sweet mead found the earth was fair;
In days when sap began to spring,
In days when nature started to share.

But pleasure past is present pain,
The petals of the rose are dead,
The fleeting years are onward wing,
I live to-morrow for the dead.

A GREAT SEA MONSTER.

The following well told "sea serpent" story purports to be an account written by Matthew Strong, a shipbuilder, under date of March 22, to the Burnley Gazette, from on board the steamship Hydaspes:

We steamed out of Bombay harbor on the morning of Monday, the 14th of March, in the steamship Hydaspes, Capt. Reynolds. Nothing of remark occurred up to Saturday. The weather was cool, and nearly every one slept below; only one passenger, a Capt. Davidson and myself remaining on deck for the night. I had enjoyed deep sleep at 8 by the iron washing and scrubbing the decks. I took my plate of broken biscuits to the starboard gangway, smoking them and looking at the sun rising. I was smoking some, Captain Davidson still sleeping in his cot on the port side. There was a flat calm, and the ship lay motionless, and as the sun rose from the sea behind the dark bank of mist more of color—red and little and yellow—lit up the whole expanse of sky and sea. I was looking at a strange, ruddy blot of red on the water right astern, when I was apparently now first aware of the existence of a dark, moving shadow. It did not seem to move with the other shadows on the sea, and this fixed my attention to it. Soon I saw that it was steadily approaching the vessel. I could distinguish no form, only a dark shadow, but I made out certainly that it was advancing toward us and at a great rate.

Fifteen minutes must have passed when I became capable of distinguishing the form of the advancing object. I spoke to the Captain afterward as to the distance the object could have been from us when I first distinguished it, and he told me I must have been deceived by the moving light in supposing it near the land, for, said he, guessed, from what I said, that it was then only three or four miles distant. Mistakes of a like nature, he said, are commonly made by the inexperienced; I cannot accurately describe my feelings on beholding that hideous sight. At first I turned to call to the Captain, but on second thought I did not, for there was yet time enough afterward to tell the story. I remained on deck for the whole, and my eyes never once slept from it. I called no passenger, as Capt. Davidson and my self remaining on deck for the night, all the rest turned deep sleep at 8 by the iron washing and scrubbing the decks. I took my plate of broken biscuits to the starboard gangway, smoking them and looking at the sun rising. I was smoking some, Captain Davidson still sleeping in his cot on the port side. DR. RANSOM'S

HIVE AND TOLU

SYRUP

HONEY SYRUP

Dr. Ransom's Hive (Croup) Syrup has been known and used by the medical profession over big years, and as a remedy for Colds and Coughs has an older and better reputation than any other Cough medicine ever offered to the public. It is known as the Compound Syrup of Hive and a formula may be found in every Dispensatory.

Dr. Ransom's Hive Syrup and Tolu, in addition to the ingredients for Cough Hive Syrup, contains Balsam of Tolu, decoction of Slippery Elm Bark and Honey, a combination that must commend it to every one as a superior remedy for Croup, Whooping Cough, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs, and Colds, and for all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

This Syrup is Carefully Prepared under the personal direction of a regular Hyde, one of over twenty years' practice, whose signature is attached to the directions on the bottle.

Its taste is very pleasant to children like it.

Every family should keep it as a ready remedy for Croup, Colds, etc., as the children are all subject to it.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking System.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, assisting the operative influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic like the purgative principle of DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the deleterious matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the excretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forewarned.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offspring of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and malignant cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, Malignant, Scarlet, Typhoid, Yellow Fever, Diseases of the Chest, Female Complaints, Jaundice, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Blood Poisons, Piles, Constipation, Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, these Bitters display so wide and extensive an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores, cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

For Purifying the Blood, Liver, Stomach, Skin, and Kidney Diseases, Biliousness, Fever, Inflammatory and Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Blood, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Painting and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, these Bitters literally sig up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

DR. A. TRASK'S

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of Magnetism, combined and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world the result of his experiments, a combination of vegetable substances with the Magnetic Principle, which seems to possess all the virtues of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of Magnetism in its highest state with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of disease, stamps it at once as the most valuable remedy ever given to the public for the cure of that great source of human misery.

It never fails to relieve pain, remains and defies life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a permanent cure is effected over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be reached by any other remedy.

Certain is the power of this great remedy, that it cannot fail to cure Rheumatism in any form, whether Muscular, Chronic, Inflammatory, Sciatica, Lumbago, Sprains, Bruises, Sores, Stiffness of the Joints, Neuralgia, Tic Doloureux, Sore Throat, Diphtheria, Quinsy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Fever Sores, Piles, Burns, Scalds, &c., &c. It is immediately absorbed by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

THE NEWS.

A CAMPHLET lately issued by Gen. Ignatieff, the Ambassador at Constantinople, has created a great sensation. He proposes to divide the Turkish Empire into five principalities, to be named, respectively, Bulgarian, Albanian, Servian, Bosnian and Greek.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch of the 11th say the Grand Vizier had addressed a circular to the Governors of the Turkish provinces suspending the regulations promulgated during the reign of the late Sultan, and directing them to await fresh laws.

On the 10th, Mr. Blaine was before the Sub-Judiciary Committee, and again refused to produce the Mulligan letters. Hiram Mulligan has sworn that he never sent one letter which referred to the case, and he would deliver up that letter if requested to do so. Mr. Blaine has thus demanded the letter and the Mulligan memorandum, but Mr. Blaine said, if the demand was made on the general principle that the Committee had the right to demand the whole of the letters, he would still decline to furnish it. Mr. Lawrence, of the room thought that the Committee had understood as nonconcurring in the request for the letters.

JUNE 9 closed the first calendar month of the Nineteenth Century. The allowance for that time had exceeded 1,000,000.

A LONDON dispatch of the 11th states that Gibraltar was being regaled to a report a garrison of 2,000 men for six weeks.

ON the morning of the 11th Mr. Blaine, accompanied by his wife, walked to the Congregational Church, about three-quarters of a mile from his residence in Washington. Entering the vestibule he was overcome with sudden illness that he came near falling. He was assisted to a seat, when he exclaimed, "Oh, this pain," and became unconscious. He was then conveyed home, and physicians were summoned to attend him. He lay in an unconscious state until four in the morning, at which time it was reported that he was suffering from another severe attack, but the physicians announced the cause on of unstroke. His family physician reported his condition at eight o'clock in the evening to be one of simple cerebral depression produced primarily by great mental anxiety, and secondarily by action of the excessive heat; there was no apoplectic congestion or effusion, nor any symptoms of paralysis, and the physician had every reason to anticipate speedy and complete recovery. Reporters late in the evening were to the effect that his condition was still improving.

ACCORDING to London dispatches of the 12th the negotiations between the United States and Great Britain on the extradition question were again at a deadlock. A large cotton firm operating several factories near Waterford, Ireland, failed on the 12th, with liabilities reaching 1,000,000.

A BERNE (Switzerland) dispatch of the 12th reports destructive inundations in eastern Switzerland. The whole canton of Thurgau had been submerged.

EDWARD COLLARSON, a Chicago Alderman, was, on the 12th, convicted of a violation of the law defining his duty as Gauger.

JAKE ZUESSMARBER, a Milwaukee, crooked distiller, was, on the 12th, sentenced to five months' imprisonment and to pay a due of $10,000.

FOUR white men and one colored were killed by lightning, near Springfield, Tenn., on the 10th. Two other white men were injured, one fatally. They had taken refuge under a tree, during a thunder-storm.

THERE were serious riots in Belgium on the 12th, caused by dissatisfaction at the result of the late parliamentary election, in which the Catholics were successful. At Antwerp on the night of that day fighting was going on all over the city, and the National troops had to be called out. Several volleys were fired into the mob.

A SERIOUS riot occurred at Gibraltar, on the 13th, brought on by the conduct of the sailors on board the German fleet toward the women of that place.

ACCORDING to a Berlin telegram of the 13th, Turkey had demanded of Servia the immediate payment of her overdue tribute.

A STATE Democratic Convention was held at Bangor, Maine, on the 13th, at which a ticket headed by John C. Talbot, for Governor, was placed in nomination. Delegates were chosen to the next Union Convention who were instructed to support Tilden for the Presidency. The resolutions commend the conduct of the Lower House of Congress in instituting investigations and oppose the inflation of the National currency.

THE Delaware State Democratic Convention met at Dover, on the 13th, and chose delegates to the National Convention, who were instructed to support Hendricks for the Presidency. The platform favors hard money.

GEN. SHERMAN reached Cheyenne, Wy. T., on the 13th, and left immediately for the north.

A CHEYENNE dispatch of the 13th announces the return to that city of an old resident direct from Deadwood. He brought with him four pounds of gold dust. No Indians were seen on his return trip. He says the Deadwood mines are very rich, and gives an instance coming under his own observation where five men in a single day secured three pounds of dust. Three were from 4 feet and 600 feet on the Deadwood and its tributaries.

MR. BLAINE'S condition had materially improved up to the morning of the 14th. Mr. Kerr, who had been seriously ill, was rapidly recovering.

ON the 13th, the indictments against ex-Collector Wadsworth and ex-United States District-Attorney Ward, of Chicago, for alleged complicity in crooked whisky transactions, were dismissed at the instance of the Government.

THE trial of Gen. Babcock for his alleged connection with the Washington safe-burglary case has been set for Sept. 19.

HON. HENRY B. ANTHONY was re-elected United States Senator, on the 13th, by the Rhode Island Legislature.

THE Women's International Temperance Convention met in Philadelphia on the 13th. Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer was elected permanent President, and delivered the welcoming address, which was responded to by Mrs. M. B. Parker, of Dundee, Scotland, the President of the Temperance Union of Great Britain. A letter was read from Queen Victoria declining to send a representative, and saying the matter must rest with the people of Great Britain.

ACCORDING to Bagnas telegrams of the 13th, the Herzegovinian insurgents had declined to accept of the Turkish armistice.

AT Antwerp, the disturbances were removed on the 14th. Many persons were marched through the streets shouting "Down with the Ministers." A Catholic procession was attacked by Socialists. The gen d'armes charged upon the mob and wounded several persons.

ON the 14th the passenger rates between the East and West suffered another reduction, being fixed as follows: Chicago to New York, $24; to Boston, $24; to Baltimore and Washington, $22; to Cleveland, $6; to Buffalo and to Niagara Falls, $11. On some of the roads the tickets are limited.

REV. H. D. ROGERS died at Philadelphia, on the 13th, aged 100 years, five months and two days. She was born and had always lived in that city. Her faculties remained clear and her memory strong almost to the last.

THE Mississippi State Democratic Convention met at Jackson on the 14th. Delegates were chosen to the National Convention, who were uninstructed, except to vote as a unit and to oppose the two-thirds rule. They were believed to favor Tilden.

THE North Carolina State Democratic Convention met at Raleigh on the 14th, and nominated a full State ticket, headed by Z. B. Vance for Governor.

THE Court of the Queen's Bench has ordered the unconditional released Winslow, the forger, and the United States having declined to negotiate a supplemental Extradition treaty.

LONDON dispatches of the 15th announce several important failures, with liabilities reaching $750,000.

THE celebrated German (tribunal Senator, Dr. Peterman, is dead.

THE Connecticut House of Representatives, the 14th, by a vote of 128 to 72 passed a law reducing the legal rate of interest from seven to six per cent.

MRS. ABRAHAM LINCOLN, who a year ago was declared insane and sent to an asylum, has recovered and been restored to the possession of her estate by the same court which adjudged her demented.

AT the first annual session of the American Nurserymen's Association lately held in Chicago, a formal organization was effected. E. Moody, of Lockport, N. Y., was chosen President for the ensuing year; several Vice-Presidents were also elected; the Secretary is D. Smith, of Galena, Ill.; Treasurer, A. R. Whitney, of Frankinton, Ill.; Executive Committee, T. S. Hubbard, L. B. Seofield and J. J. Harrison. The next annual meeting will be held in Chicago.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

On the 9th, the Postoffice Appropriation bill was amended in the Senate, by increasing the amounts of several of the items, and the bill, as amended, was then passed. A bill allowing the widow of President Polk $1,000 for supplies furnished to the army in Texas, was passed in the House. An existing rebuking debate occurred over Mr. Blaine's refusal to reconsider the vote for the printing of the testimony taken before the Judiciary Committee. Mr. Blaine participated in the controversy. Mr. Kasson, a quite partisan, he being called to order by the Speaker pro tem. The controversy was purely personal relative to the Caldwell telegram, while a finally unanimous consent was asked for the pronunciation of a resolution that such dispatch be printed as a part of the testimony in the case, and that the Committee be instructed to examine any witnesses who may be called who may have been the said Caldwell to make the same or contradictory statement as that contained in said dispatch. Objection was made to receiving the resolution, and considerable excitement and confusion ensued. A resolution was also offered that on the 15th, 16th and 17th no business of a political character should be considered by the House, and Mr. Hendricks spoke in favor of the resolution, but it was not received. The report of the Conference Committee on the $27,000 for the appointment of Receivers of National Banks was agreed to. A large number of members were granted leave of absence.

ON the 10th, the concurrent resolution accepting the statue of Ethan Allen, presented by Vermont for the National Statuary Hall at the Capitol, was adopted in the Senate. It being discovered that a quorum was not present, no further business was transacted. In the House there were passed—the bill relating to immigrating, providing that when Colorado is admitted as a State of the United States shall never pay, in the same form as elsewhere, and that such State shall constitute one judicial district; providing for the issue of the silver coin in the Treasury in the amount of $50,000,000 in redemption of the fractional currency tenders; providing that the issue of $50,000,000 in silver coin in addition to the amount already authorized by law, and prohibiting the bankruptcy law, and enforcing the specie clause of the act. The majority report on the contested Monaghan-Bennett case, favoring the substitution of Abbott for Frost, the sitting member, and his minority report, were presented and ordered printed. The Senate amendments to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill were concurred in. The Geneva Award bill was further debated.

ON the 10th, without transacting any business, the Senate adjourned to the 13th. In the House the joint resolution to modify the treaty with China so as to restrict immigration was finally reported and made to the Abbottsville case in favor of the Spencer delegation.

The report of the committee on all points save that in favor of Spencer was adopted. A lively discussion then ensued on the Alabama case, after which the minority report was rejected—yeas, 69; nays, 126—and the report of the majority was adopted.

The Committee on Resolutions then reported the following platform, which was adopted unanimously adopted without amendment:

WHEREAS, The Democratic party, at the threshold of the government of the people, by the people, for the people, was the first to proclaim the high political truth that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," and that "all men are created equal;" and

WHEREAS, The Republican party, in the hour of the nation's peril, appealed to this truth, and embodied it in the form of words unalterable by human enactment, and placed it in the organic law of the land, in order that "all men may be secured in their natural rights;" and

WHEREAS, The Democratic party has ever since resisted with power any infraction of this great principle, whether directed against the African race in the interest of human slavery, or against any class of citizens in the interest of a privileged class; and

WHEREAS, The Republican party, during the late civil war, and throughout the entire period of reconstruction, has grossly violated this great principle, by the creation of new privileged classes, by the establishment of sectional governments, by the support of governments in the South which did not represent the people, by the disfranchisement of large classes of citizens, and by the overthrow in various forms of the rights of local self-government, which lie at the foundation of all free institutions; and

WHEREAS, The Democratic party pledged in its last platform to the correction of these evils, and has fulfilled that pledge in the administration of every House of Representatives which it has controlled since 1874, reducing the burdens of taxation, abolishing useless offices, cutting down salaries, and bringing in the strictest economy in the administration of the government; and

WHEREAS, The Democratic party, in the exercise of the power lawfully devolving upon it by the Constitution, has refused to appropriate money for the payment of the army of the Potomac, for the reason that the presence of that army at the polls of the South was declared by the Republican party to be necessary to the success of the Republican party
